some Government promissory notes, which had been deposited as security for certain loans, and claimed a specified sum as damages or in the alternative a decree for an account. The defendant bank denied the alleged agreement, and asserted that the notes had been sold after due notice and on failure of the plaintiff to comply with the terms on which the loans were made. Interrogatories were administered for the examination of the plaintiff, and amongst them one in the following terms: "State how your estimate of damages to the amount of Rs. 1,30,000 mentioned in the eighth paragraph of the plaint is arrived at?" Upon the plaintiff declining to answer that interrogatory, the defendant bank applied on notice for an order under s. 127 of the Code of Civil Procedure requiring him to answer it fully. Held that the plaintiff was not bound to answer it. If, on the one hand, it was intended to elicit the principle on which the damages were estimated by the plaintiff, the defendant was not entitled to discovery on that point. If, on the other hand, it was sought to elicit an account of the transactions between the parties, it was unnecessary, as the transactions were within the knowledge of the defendant bank; and if it were not, then the enquiry was premature, as the question whether there had been any wrongful act committed and whether the plaintiff was entitled to any damages should be first determined. *NECKRAM DOBAY v. Before a guardian ad litem had been appointed for the minor defendant, an application was made to the High Court to transfer the case from the Mofussil Court to the High Court in its ordinary original civil jurisdiction by the minor defendant through a next friend. It was contended that the application was informal, and could not be granted, and that no such application could be made on behalf of the infant defendant until a guardian ad litem had been appointed, and then it should be made by him. Held that the objection should not prevail, and that this application could be made through the next friend. *JOTENDRONATH MITTER v. Where the appellants waited from the 18th August 1898, the date of filing their memorandum of appeal, till the 22nd September 1898, before applying for office copies of the necessary papers to enable them to prepare their paper-books, and an application was made by the appellants on the 12th December 1898 for two months' further time to file their paper-books, the delay between the 18th August and the 22nd September 1898 being unexplained,—Held that no sufficient cause had been shown for extension of time, nor was the case altered by the fact that the paper-books were ready when a subsequent application was made on the appeal being called on for hearing, and an application for leave to file them was consequently dismissed. The defendant appealed, making the next friend alone respondent, and had the decree of the Court of first instance modified in his favour. The next friend appealed to the High Court, where the respondent objected to the next friend being heard, on the ground that she was no party to the suit. Held that the Court would not entertain the objection at the instance of the party through whose fault the error occurred, but that the judgment of the Court below should be set aside, and that of the Court of first instance restored. 90. ——— Suit instituted on behalf of minor by next friend—Application for execution of decree by plaintiff on attaining majority and after death of next friend without complying with requirements of s. 451, Civil Procedure Code—Title of suit.—Unless there is an absolute bar created by positive enactment, a person who has attained his full age is prima facie entitled to proceed with a suit instituted on his behalf during his minority, or to make any application therein, and, if necessary, the Court will, as a matter of course, give him leave to proceed or act in his own name. When a person, on whose behalf a suit had been revived and carried on by his next friend, made, after attaining his majority, and long after the death of the next friend, an application in his own name for execution of the decree in the suit without having complied with the requirements of s. 451 of the Civil Procedure Code as to electing to proceed with the suit and obtaining leave of the Court to do so, and the application was admitted and notice of execution given to the defendant,—Held, under the circumstances, that such omission to comply with the requirements of s. 451, though an irregularity, was not a bar to the application being allowed to proceed. An application, under s. 451 for leave to proceed with a suit, does not require any notice, but may be made ex-parte at any time. Even if the application in this case therefore were not itself a sufficient indication that the applicant elected to proceed with the suit, and that the Court in allowing him to proceed in his own name gave him the required leave (and semble that would be the case), the Court could give such leave at the hearing of the application ex-pro tunc. Defendant pleaded minority at the date of the transactions, denied all liability, also denied receiving Rs. 5,500, but admitted receipt of Rs. 1,500, which sum together with interest he tendered to the plaintiff in full satisfaction of his claim. On refusal by the plaintiff to accept that sum, it was paid into Court. The plaintiff then applied to the Court for payment to him of the said amount. The defendant contended that the amount should be kept in Court pending the hearing, as all liability was denied, and offered to pay interest if plaintiff succeeded in his suit. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to take the money out of Court. DWARKA DASS AGUWALLAH v. 98. ——— Contentious matter—Duty of Registrar—When a petition for probate or letters of administration becomes contentious—Non-appearance of caveator—Form of order.—So long as a petition for probate or letters of administration is "non-contentious," it is to be dealt with by the Registrar. As soon as it becomes "contentious," it is to be treated as a plaint in a suit, and the suit is governed, as far as practicable, by the procedure prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code. The petition becomes contentious not upon the entry of a caveat, but upon the filing of the affidavit in support of the caveat. Where, in consequence of the filing of the affidavit, the matter becomes a suit, the whole suit must be disposed of by the decree of the Court. Where therefore, at the hearing of the suit, the defendant does not appear in support of the caveat, it is not a correct procedure for the Court merely to dismiss the caveat, leaving it to the Registrar to dispose of the petition as a non-contentious matter. The proper form of order is that the caveat be dismissed and that probate or letters of administration issue, provided that the Court is satisfied that the papers are in order. CHHOTALAL CHUNILAL v. revival, and that, if no person were living whose consent might be obtained, or to whom notice might be given, the Court might give leave without any such consent or notice, and that the proper course to pursue was to allow the plaintiffs to amend their plaint by putting it in the form of a petition under s. 372 of the Civil Procedure Code, the defendant being at liberty to put in any answer which he might have done if the proceeding had been by petition in the first instance. Per PONTIFEX, J.—The words "pending the suit" in s. 372 relate to a suit in which no final order has been made. GOOOOL CHUNDER GOSSAMER v. ADMINISTRATOR GENERAL OF BENGAL [I. L. R., 5 Cal., 726; 5 C. L. R., 569]

114. — Rule to show cause—Rule nisi to show cause why a person should not be made a party defendant—No grounds stated in or served with the rule—Rule granted during hearing of suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 82.—During the hearing of a suit for recovery of immovable property it appeared from the evidence and certain documents put in that the plaintiff had mortgaged his right, title, and interest to a third person, by whom the suit was practically being carried on. On an application by the defendant for the mortgagee to be added as a party defendant, under the provisions of s. 82 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court directed a rule to issue calling on him to show cause why he should not be added as a party defendant or give security for costs. The rule was not applied for on petition or affidavit, and set out no grounds for the application at all. On an objection taken by the mortgagee at the hearing of the rule, — Held that the grounds should have been stated on affidavit or have appeared on the face of the rule, and that the mortgagee was entitled to know what he had to answer, and consequently, the rule being informal, it was discharged with costs. RAM-NARAIN KALLIA v. MONEE BIBEK. RAMNARAIN KALLIA v. GOPAL DOSS SING I. L. R., 9 Cal., 735

117. — Sale by Registrar—Purchase money, Payment of, into Court—Conditions of sale—Interest—Costs.—Where the purchaser of a property at a Registrar's sale is out of time in paying into Court the balance of his purchase-money, the practice of the Original Side of the High Court is that payment of interest shall follow as a matter of course. But if there has been delay on the part of the party having the carriage of the proceedings, and if that party appears on the summons taken out by the purchaser for the purpose of paying into Court the balance of such purchase-money, he shall not be allowed his costs against the purchaser. KANTER LALL DASS v. SHAMA CHURN DAWN [I. L. R., 21 Cal., 566]

118. — Security for costs—Bond to secure costs of appeal—Rule nisi against obligor—Sureties.—The proper mode of proceeding to put a bond to secure the costs of an appeal in suit is to move upon affidavits, showing a breach of the condition of the bond, for a rule nisi, calling upon the obligor and sureties to show cause why the Court should not order that the bond be assigned to some person named in the rule. POYNOR BIBER v. NUJJOO KHAN . I. L. R., 5 Cal., 437; 5 C. L. R., 524

See SESHAYANGAR v. JAINULABADIN [I. L. R., 3 Mad., 66]

120. — Filing copy of Judge's notes—Certificate of payment of security for costs.—A certified copy of the Judge's notes not having been filed, and there being no certificate from the Prothonotary that security had been given for costs, the appeal was dismissed for non-compliance with the rules of the Court. BRIMJI GRIDHAR v. MORGAN . 3 Bom., O. C., 63

121. — Time for objecting to appeal for non-compliance with rules of Court.—Appeal dismissed, as the appellants had not given security for costs, and as the appeal had not been filed within the time required by the rules of the Court. It is sufficient for the respondent to object at the hearing of the appeal in the case of non-compliance with the rules of Court, and he need not apply specially to have the appeal rejected, when the memorandum of appeal is preferred. MUHAMMADBAI DHARAMSI v. BHANJI TOPAN . 3 Bom., O. C., 64

122. — Civil Procedure Code, s. 549—Dismissal of appeal—Practice.—The last paragraph of s. 549 of the Civil Procedure Code seems to contemplate that, on failure to furnish security within the time fixed, an order for rejecting the appeal should be obtained from the Court that gave the order to furnish security. Upon the application of the respondent in a second appeal pending before the High Court, an order was passed requiring the appellant to furnish security for the costs of the appeal, and to lodge such security at any time before the hearing. This order purported to be made under s. 549 of the Civil Procedure Code, but neither the application nor the order stated the amount of the security required. At the hearing of the appeal, no security having been lodged, the respondent objected that, with reference to the terms of s. 549, the Court had no option but to dismiss the appeal. Held that the proper course was to have applied to the Judge who passed the order for security, at any time before the case came on for hearing, for the rejection of the appeal, and that it was too late at the hearing to ask the Court to reject the appeal. THAKUR DAS v. KISHORI LAL [I. L. R., 9 All., 164]

123. — Setting down case for hearing—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 135—Trial of particular issue.—It should be a rule of practice that when an order is made under s. 135 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) by the Judge in chambers, the suit should be set down for the trial of the particular issue as well as of the cause itself when it comes to a hearing before the same Judge. AHMEDBOY HUBIBBOY v. VULLEBBOY (ASSUMBOY) . I. L. R., 6 Bom., 572

124. — Small Cause Court cases transferred to High Court—Revival of claim abandoned in Small Cause Court—Amendment of plaint.—Where the plaintiff having a claim against the defendant for Rs. 500 brought his suit in the Small Cause Court for Rs. 2,000, abandoning Rs. 500, and on the application of the defendant the case was transferred to the High Court, the plaintiff, on application by summons in chambers, was allowed to amend his plaint, so as to include the Rs. 500 abandoned in the Small Cause Court. RAM LALL v. RAJENDERKISHORE SINGH [W. R., 1864, 100]

126. — Procedure—Staying suit until costs of a previous suit in a Foreign Court have been paid.—The Courts in India have no power to stay proceedings in a suit instituted therein because the costs of a previous suit between the same parties brought in the High Court of Justice in England have not been paid. BOWLES v. BOWLES . I. L. R., 8 Bom., 571

127. — Dismissal of suit, Effect of—Application to restrain receiver parting with funds, pending appeal—Power of Court.—Under the Code of Civil Procedure, once a suit has been dismissed, the Court dismissing it is functus officio, save that it may stay execution of its own decree or order for costs. An application therefore made to a Court of first instance after dismissal of the suit, but before appeal filed, asking that the

(r).*—The plaintiff sued the defendant company to recover ₹10,000. The claim was not disputed, but shortly after the suit was filed another creditor filed a petition to wind up the company. This petition was pending when the suit came on for hearing, but no order to stay proceedings had been obtained by the defendants, and the plaintiff contended that under the circumstances he was entitled to obtain a decree, having regard to the fact that no such order had been made, and that by the rules of the Court [Rule No. 10, cl. (r)] such order could only be made in chambers. Held, on application by the defendants at the hearing, that the proceedings must be stayed. VIRBAJI v. WADIA MILLS Co. I. L. R., 18 Bom., 65

1. ——— Permanently-settled estates in Sylhet—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 14—Extension of Act.—S. 14 of Act XXIII of 1861 was not applicable to permanently-settled estates in Sylhet, nor to estates in any district of Bengal, unless extended thereto. ABDUL JABEL v. KHELAT CHUNDER GHOSH [1 B. L. R., A. C., 105 : 10 W. R., 165]

2. ——— Right and interest of co-sharer in estate in Sylhet—Substitution of claimant for actual purchaser—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 14.—The right and interest of a co-sharer in an estate in Sylhet being put up for sale in execution of a decree, the petitioner claimed the right of pre-emption under s. 14, Act XXIII of 1861, and he was thereupon substituted for the actual purchaser. Held that in such circumstances the Court executing a decree had no authority to substitute the claimant for the actual purchaser without the consent of the latter, and that a party claiming a share under the section cited was simply in the position of a party who, having a right of pre-emption, has observed the requisite formalities to enable him to assert the right, and must resort to a civil suit to obtain the benefit thereof. The orders of the lower Courts were set aside accordingly. ABDOOL JALIEL v. KALEE COOMAR DUTT [6 W. R., Mis., 3]

property in suit had been the subject of confiscation.

MOHAMED VILLAYET-OOZ-LAH KHAN v. AHMED HUSSUN KHAN 3 Agra, 70

6. ——— Confiscation and sale of rebel's property Right of co-sharers.—Where Government confiscates the share of a convict, and sells it for valuable consideration, the co-sharers have a right to claim such share by right of pre-emption on such sale, and the condition in the wajib-ul-urz is binding on Government as much as it was on the original owner, Government acquiring the share subject to the same condition as the former held it.
COLLECTOR OF FUTTEHPUR v. YAD ALI 1 Agra, 88

7. ——— Buildings—Custom—Exercise of pre-emption in kotees and golahs.—Exercise of right of pre-emption allowed in respect of a kotee and golah, as it was proved that, according to local usage and custom, such properties were subject to pre-emption. KESHO RAI v. BINAYAK RAI. BINAYAK RAI v. LUOHMER RAI 3 Agra, 179

8. ——— Separate estates—Co-parcenary, Pre-emption on ground of.—Properties bearing separate numbers in the Collector's rent-roll are separate estates in the legal sense of the word "estate," implying such a separation as bars a claim to pre-emption on the ground of co-parcenary. JOBBAR SINGH v. TOOKUN SINGH 14 W. R., 478

9. ——— Claim to mesne profits.—A claim to mesne profits due before the date on which a right to pre-emption arose cannot form the subject of pre-emption. EMAMOODDEEN SOWDAGUR v. ABDUL SOOBHAN 7 W. R., 117

10. ——— Lease in perpetuity—Transfer other than sale.—Pre-emption applies only to sales. A lease in perpetuity, with a rent (however small) reserved, is not a sale, and cannot therefore be the subject of pre-emption. MOOROOLY RAM v. HURRI RAM 8 W. R., 106

11. ——— Transfer by lease—Alienation or transfer of proprietary right.—Held that a provision in the wajib-ul-urz securing a right of pre-emption to the sharers in cases of sale or mortgage was not applicable to transfer by lease, which was not such an alienation as was contemplated by the terms of the wajib-ul-urz, viz., alienation or transfer of proprietary rights. MANICK CHAND v. BISHAI-SUR BUKHSH SINGH 2 Agra, 99

12. ——— Transfer to manager on trust—Alienation giving right to pre-emption.—Where shares in a mouzah were by arrangement between the parties made over to a manager upon trust to pay part of the profits to the debtors of the transferors, and the residue of the profits to the transferors, who bound themselves not to alienate until the debts were paid. —Held that it was not such alienation as would confer on the plaintiff a right of pre-emption under the wajib-ul-urz. OUTAR SINGH v. ABLAKHNE KOONWEE 2 Agra, 326

13. ——— Alienation of "chuck" tenure—Right of sharer in samindari.—Where a resumed masfee "chuck" was aliened by the holder thereof, and a preferential right to take it was claimed by a sharer in the samindari under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz agreed to by the co-sharers at the time of settlement, and to which the holder of the "chuck" was no party. —Held that such alienation was not an alienation of a share within the meaning of the wajib-ul-urz; that the holder of the "chuck" could neither confer on its possessor a right of pre-emption, nor subject his estate to such right in the event of alienation. SEKO LALL SAHOO v. RUK-ZANEE 2 Agra, 35

14. ——— Exchange of property—Transfer giving right of pre-emption—Consideration.—A share in a mouzah, together with the dwelling-house of the proprietor, was exchanged for a share and dwelling-house in another mouzah. Held that the transaction, being an exchange of property, was a sale, and that the right to purchase the land, but not the house, was claimable by a co-sharer by right of pre-emption. The consideration payable by the pre-emptor is the estimated value of the property given in exchange, and not that of the property claimed. SEWA RAM v. BISAL CHOWDHRY [1 Agra, 144]

15. ——— Sale and re-sale before confirmation—Transfer raising right of pre-emption.—Where the decree-holder purchased the rights of his judgment-debtors sold at auction in satisfaction of his own decree, but having received the amount of the decree re-sold the property to the judgment-debtors before the confirmation of the sale. —Held that the transaction did not amount to an alienation such as would give a right to the co-sharers of the debtors to exercise the right of pre-emption under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz. MAHOMED RAZA KHAN v. JAWAHIR SINGH 2 Agra, 1

16. ——— Transfer under compromise and decree thereon to person claiming pre-emption—Wajib-ul-urz.—An appeal having been preferred from a decree in a suit for pre-emption based on the wajib-ul-urz of a village, the parties to the suit entered into a compromise whereby the plaintiff-pre-emptor relinquished his claim to a part of the property in dispute in favour of the defendants-vendees, and the latter admitted his claim with respect of the remainder of the property. Upon this compromise a decree was passed. Subsequently a co-sharer in the village where the property was situate brought a suit for pre-emption, upon the contention that the compromise and the decree passed thereon amounted to a transfer to the plaintiff in the former suit within the meaning of the wajib-ul-uruz. Held that the suit was not maintainable. HANUMAN RAI v. UDIT NARAIN RAI

[I. L. R., 7 All., 917]

17. ——— Transfer by compromise—Wajib-ul-uruz—“Transfer”—“Sale.”—On the 1st September 1881 L and R entered into an agreement (which was duly registered) with B that in consideration of their bringing a suit for recovery of a 12-anna share in a village which B claimed by right of inheritance against G, they should receive a moiety of the share. L and R found funds for the prosecution of two suits in respect of the share, which on the 5th April 1882 were compromised, B getting 1 anna and 3 pies out of the 12 annas originally claimed by her. In that compromise B stated as follows: “I make over 1 anna to L and R, my partners, in lieu of the prosecution of the two cases. I, the plaintiff, shall remain in possession of the remaining 3 pies.” Meanwhile, on the 3rd September 1881, G had sold 3 annas out of the 12 annas share to M. On the 3rd April 1883 M brought a suit against L and R, claiming the right of pre-emption in respect of the 1 anna which they had acquired from B on the allegation that the transfer of the share had taken place on the 5th April 1882. This claim was based on the wajib-ul-uruz of the village, which gave a right of pre-emption to the co-sharers of any sharer wishing to “transfer” his share. Held that the compromise of the 5th April 1882 was only a re-adjustment of the amount of the interest in the share between B and L and R; that the real transfer to L and R was given effect to on the 1st September 1881, and that, this having been prior to the acquisition by M of any right in the village, he was not a co-sharer at the time of the transfer; and that he had consequently no right as against L and R by way of claim for pre-emption. LACHMI NARAIN v. The claimant should have sued to set aside the order of the Court confirming the sale in favour of the auction-purchaser and to have himself declared entitled to the pre-emption of the property and to be substituted for the auction-purchaser as its purchaser. SHIB SAHAI v. 21. ——— Co-sharer—Sale in execution of share in immovable property—Stranger—Highest bidder—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 310.—A co-sharer in undivided immovable property of which a share is sold in the execution of a decree does not, under s. 310 of Act X of 1877, acquire the right of pre-emption as against a stranger to whom such share has been knocked down by merely asserting such right at the time of sale and fulfilling the conditions of sale required by ss. 306 and 307 of that Act. He must bid at the sale and as high as the stranger before he can acquire a right of pre-emption under that section. TEJ SINGH v. GOBIND SINGH

22. ——— Sale in execution of share in immovable property—Manner of claiming pre-emption—Highest bidder—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 310.—The requirements of s. 310 of Act X of 1877 are not satisfied by the co-sharer preferring his claim to the right of pre-emption before the property is knocked down, and offering to pay a sum equal to that bid by the highest bidder. 26. ——— Requisite of valid claim—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 14—Conditions required by Mahomedan law.—If a person claiming pre-emption under the provisions of s. 14 of Act XXIII of 1861 fulfilled the conditions of sale respecting the deposit of the purchase-money, the sale could not be held void merely by the failure of the person to whose bid the property was knocked down also to complete the deposit. All that the claimant was bound to do was to establish that he was a pattidar within the meaning of the section in the estate of which the property sold formed part, and that he had fulfilled the conditions of sale. If he established this, the sale should be confirmed in his favour, unless some irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale was shown which would justify the setting aside of the sale. The conditions of pre-emption under the Mahomedan law did not apply to a claim brought under the section. DABEE PERSHAD v. BISHESHUR PERSHAD SINGH

27. ——— Wajib-ul-urrs, Claim under—Conditions required by Mahomedan law.—Held that the person in whose favour a preferential right of purchase is stipulated for, by the terms of the wajib-ul-urrs, is entitled to a decree if he comes forward and claims his right, without unreasonable delay, after he hears that a sale has been made without any tender to him, although he may not have proved specially that he has fulfilled all the conditions required in the case of a claim of pre-emption under the Mahomedan law of Shuffa. KOULA PUT v. 28. ——— Act XXIII of 1861, s. 14—Sale of pattidari estate in execution of decree—Act I of 1841, s. 2—Right of co-sharer.—It was incumbent on an officer conducting a sale in execution of decree, of land which was a share of a pattidari estate paying revenue to Government, as defined in s. 2 of Act I of 1841, to take notice of a claim made by a person under the provisions of s. 14 of Act XXIII of 1861, and to receive the purchase-money as a fulfilment of the conditions of the sale, subject to any question which might be raised by any party interested in the sale as to the claimant's title to advance the claim. When the whole of the purchase-money has been paid by the claimant within due time, the Court executing the decree, unless it is satisfied that he has no right to advance the claim, cannot treat the payment by him as a nullity, but must accept it as a fulfilment of the conditions of the sale respecting the purchase-money, and the sale is not defeasible by the failure of the bidder to complete the deposit of the purchase-money. The sale to the claimant cannot become absolute until it has been confirmed, and until it has become absolute, he cannot maintain a suit for possession. If the claimant has fulfilled the conditions of sale, and his right is clear, the Court executing the decree is bound to give effect to the right. TASUDUK ALI v. MUHSUD ALI

29. ——— Sale in execution of decree.—During the minority of two out of four brothers an ikrarnama was entered into between them to the effect that no separation was to take place without the consent of all, and that, if one of them separated without such consent, he was to forfeit his share of the family property, and that, if any one wished to dispose of his share, he was to give his brothers the preference. One F purchased at a private sale the share of M, one of the brothers. On this two of the brothers, A and I, brought a suit against F to set aside the sale as contrary to the terms of the ikrarnama, and urged their claim to pre-emption. The suit was decreed with a stipulation that the purchase-money should be paid back. This not having been done, F sued M, got a decree, and in execution put up for sale M's rights and interests in the family estate, bought them himself, and took possession. The present suit is by A and I to recover possession on the ground that M had no rights and interests left which could be sold in execution. Held that, as M had never separated, his share had not been forfeited, and that the only other privilege left to the plaintiffs under the ikrar, viz., pre-emption, could not be exercised, inasmuch as M had not sold his share, the sale having been the act of the Court. FARZAT ALI v. 31. ——— Condition for assertion of right—Wajib-ul-urrs—Offer of property—Notification that property is for sale and offers will be received—Acquiescence.—In order to entitle a co-sharer to assert a right of pre-emption based on the wajib-ul-urrs, there must, as a condition precedent to such assertion, be a sale of a share already negotiated with a stranger, and a price fixed with the stranger by the co-sharer desiring to sell. The only mode in which a pre-emptive claim can then be defeated is by proof of a distinct intimation to the co-sharer seeking to maintain such claim, of the contemplated sale, and of the price agreed to be paid by the stranger, of an offer to him (the co-sharer) at such price, and of his refusal to purchase. Where the sale in respect of which the pre-emptive claim was raised was one made by the Collector as Manager of the Court of Wards, and the Collector, before selling the property, issued a proclamation through the tehsildar notifying to all the shareholders that the property was for sale, and that sharers intending to purchase should make offers.—Held that such a notification was not a sufficiently distinct and definite notice of a negotiated and intended sale to a stranger, so as to estop co-sharers failing to make an offer to purchase from subsequently asserting their pre-emptive rights. SUBHAGI v. MUHAMMAD ISHAQ I. L. R., 6 All, 463

32. Association of strangers in purchase—Specification of interest purchased by each person.—Where two co-sharers entitled to pre-emption in certain villages associated strangers with them in the purchase of such villages and other landed property.—Held that they must be regarded in the light of total strangers in respect of the whole of the property included in the sale-deed, and that a note at the foot of the sale-deed mentioning the interest severally purchased by each of the vendees would not entitle them to retain the shares respectively purchased by them. GUNESHEE LAL v. ZARAUT ALI 2 N. W., 343

33. Joint purchase by co-sharer and strangers—Specification of interests taken by purchasers.—A co-sharer of an estate sold his share to B, who was also a co-sharer in such estate, and to two other persons, who were not co-sharers, but "strangers," selling it to all of them jointly and collectively, for one integral sum as the consideration for the whole. The deed of sale specified that each of the purchasers took a one-third share of the property sold. The co-sharers of the estate were entitled, on the sale by a co-sharer of his share, to the right of pre-emption. Held that such specification could not alter the joint nature of the sale transaction or permit of its being broken up and treated as involving three separate contracts, so as to entitle B, as a co-sharer having an equal right of pre-emption, to resist, so far as one-third of the property was concerned, a claim by another co-sharer to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of such sale, but B must be regarded as a "stranger" in respect of the whole of the property sold by reason of having associated himself with "strangers." Guneshee Lal v. 34. Wajib-ul-urs—Co-sharers—"Ek jaddi."—The wajib-ul-urs of a village gave a right of pre-emption, in cases of sale, to "brothers," and provided that, on refusal by a "brother," there should be a right of pre-emption in favour of co-sharers in the thoke who were related to the vendor by descent from a common ancestor

("hissadaran ekjaddi thoke"). It was also provided that, in the event of any dispute arising as to price, it should be settled by arbitration, and that, "if the co-sharers do not take at the amount fixed by the arbitrators," the co-sharer desiring to sell might make the transfer to a stranger. Held that co-sharers who were not of common descent from the vendor were entitled to pre-emption after own brothers and co-sharers ek jaddi and to have preference over strangers. Guneshee Lal v. Zaraut Ali, 2 N. W., 343, followed. SABIE ALI v. YAD RAM I. L. R., 9 All, 680

35. Benami purchaser—Purchaser not a co-parcener—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 14.—Where the rights of a judgment-debtor in a pattidari estate were sold at auction in execution of decree, and bid for by the son of the judgment-debtor who gave the name of his father-in-law to whom the property was knocked down (and who was not a co-parcener in the estate) as the actual purchaser, such father-in-law subsequently waiving his claim as auction-purchaser in favour of the judgment-debtor. Held under s. 14 of Act XXIII of 1861 that the property had been knocked down to a stranger, and that the right of pre-emption attached in favour of the person entitled thereto on such sale, he having done all that was necessary to assert his claim. GUNGA RAM v. 36. Co-sharers—Recorded co-sharers—Benami purchase of shares—Sale by co-sharer—Claim for pre-emption resisted by person claiming to be co-sharer by virtue of benami transaction—Equitable estoppel.—A secret purchase of benami shares in a village does not constitute the purchaser a co-sharer for the purposes of pre-emption either under the Mahomedan law or under the provisions of a wajib-ul-urs, so as to enable him upon the strength of the interest so acquired to defeat an otherwise unquestionable pre-emptive right preferred by a duly recorded shareholder who had no notice direct or constructive of his title, and asserted immediately upon his purchase of a share, for the first time, in his true character. Ramcoomar Koondoo v. 37. Co-sharer—"Proprietor"—Transferee of lands in a village who has not obtained mutation of names in his favour—Wajib-ul-urs.—In a suit for pre-emption under a wajib-ul-urs which gave a right of pre-emption to "co-sharers" in a village, —Held that the word "co-sharer" included a person who had acquired lands in the village, which were not merely sir of a co-sharer, and were not grove-lands held by a licensee from a zamindar, but lands belonging to a zamindar and in his occupation, notwithstanding the fact that he had not yet obtained mutation of names in respect thereof. DAKHNI DIN v. Construction of—Purchaser of isolated plot of land in mehal—Purchaser of s'r land.—The wajib-ul-urz of a village gave a right of pre-emption to "co-sharers in the mehal." One of the co-sharers brought a suit for pre-emption which the vendee-defendant resisted on ground that he also was a co-sharer in the mehal, and the plaintiff had therefore no preferential right. This contention was based on a former purchase by the defendant under a deed of sale executed by a co-sharer: and comprising (i) an isolated plot of land in the mehal; (ii) s'r lands in the mehal. Held by the Full Bench that, it being found that the vendee-defendant had already become a co-sharer in the mehal prior to the date of the purchase which was in question in the suit, the plaintiff had no preferential right of pre-emption. Per MAHMOOD, J.—The decisions of the Full Bench in *Naimat Ali v. 40. ————— Pre-emption among co-sharers under the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), ss: 9 to 13—Pre-emptor's right, as such, dependent on the intending vendor's right to sell—Accounts between co-sharers—Contribution, Right to, for expenses of suit.—Pre-emption, as declared in the Oudh Laws Act, 1876, is not applicable where the co-sharer claiming it denies the title of the co-sharer proposing to sell, alleges that the latter is not a sharer, and says that he himself is entitled to the property. One of two co-sharers, entitled to equal shares in an inheritance, having taken possession of the whole, was used by the other for her share, with mesne profits from the date of the suit. To provide costs, the latter had sold to her co-plaintiffs the right to claim half of her share. The defences were—(1) relinquishment of her claim in favour of the defendant; (2) that the defendant had a right of pre-emption as to part, in consequence of the above transaction; (3) that the share in dispute was subject to a proportion of the debts due from the estate of the deceased, chargeable on the whole inheritance; and that, if the plaintiffs should be held to be entitled to a decree, they should also be declared liable to pay, according to shares, their part of all the debts of the deceased liquidated by the defendant, as well as a proportion of money which he had expended, in good faith, in litigation for the protection of the inheritance. As to (1), the two Courts below concurred in the finding that no relinquishment had taken place. As to (2), it was pointed out that there had been no attempt to sell a share of the inheritance, but only to sell a share in a suit; and it was held that the position taken up by the defendant was inconsistent with his claiming to pre-empt, so that pre-emption was inapplicable. As to (3), it was held that, although the plaintiffs could not have a decree for mesne profits during the whole period of the defendant's possession, yet, if any account was to be taken of the defendant's payments, it must also be taken of his receipts; and it was held that the incidental benefit to the plaintiffs, who had not authorized the litigation, in which expense had been incurred, did not give rise to any implied contract on their part, or render them liable in equity for any portion of that expense. ABDUL WAHID KHAN v. SHALUKA BIBI

To constitute a pattidari estate as contemplated by the 2nd section of the Act, it was necessary not only that it should come within the express terms of that section, but also that it should

47. ——— Wajib-ul-urrs—Partition of mehal—Mode of division of property where there are several pre-emptors equally entitled.—The wajib-ul-urrs, framed in 1856, of a village consisting of several pattis or thokes, gave a right of pre-emption to the owners of each thoke in respect of property situate in every other thoke, when such property was sold to any one having no share in the village co-parcenary. The mehal subsequently became the subject of perfect partition under the N.W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1875), and one of the pattis was constituted a separate mehal and a new wajib-ul-urrs was framed for it. Prior to the partition, a proprietor of land both in the pattis which remained in the original mehal and in the patti which formed the new mehal, sold property in both to a stranger. Thereupon a co-sharer in the original mehal brought a suit for pre-emption in respect of the property situate therein which had been sold, excluding the property situate in the new mehal. Held that the effect of the partition was to exclude property situate in the new mehal from the operation of the wajib-ul-urrs framed in 1856, and to place it under new conditions as to the right of pre-emption; that the plaintiff could, after the separation, exercise no such right against and in respect of shareholders and property so separated, nor could the separate share-holders exercise any right of pre-emption against the plaintiff and his property remaining in the mehal from which they had separated; and that the suit to pre-empt that portion only of the property sold which was situate in the original mehal was maintainable. Durga Prasad v. 51. ——— Meaning of the terms "Patti" and "Patti of mehal"—Co-sharers—N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1878), ss. 166, 168, 188—N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), s. 177—Interpretation of statutes.—The expression "patti of a mehal" as used in s. 188 of the N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1878) means a division of a mehal distinct from the share of an individual co-sharer. The right of pre-emption, therefore, which is given by the above-named section is not exercisable on the sale merely of the share of an individual co-sharer not amounting to such a division of a mehal. Moreover, the provisions of s. 188 of Act XIX of 1878 do not apply to a sale under s. 168 of the same Act of land other than that in respect of which the arrears which it is sold to satisfy accrued. Hence, where the share of a co-sharer in an imperfect pattidari village, not being the land in respect of which the arrears of rent, for the satisfaction of which the said share is sold, are due, is sold under the provisions of s. 177 of the N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), no right of pre-emption can be claimed in respect of such sale. So held by EDGE, C.J., and YOUNG, J., MAHMOOD, J., contra. There being no statutory definition of the word patti, that word must be taken in its ordinary acceptance, and in that acceptance it means the share of a pattidar, whether such share amounts to a definite division of a mehal or not. The exigencies of the law of pre-emption require that in s. 188 of Act XIX of 1878, the word patti should be construed in its broader signification as equivalent to any share of a pattidar. The words of s. 168, which provide that land sold under that section is to be proceeded against "as if it were the land on account of which the revenue is due under the provisions of this Act," render the incidents of sales under s. 166, including pre-emption applicable to sales under s. 168, with the exception that in such case only the defaulter's interest in the land sold passes by the sale. Hence a right of pre-emption would accrue under s. 188 in respect of the compulsory sale of any share of a co-sharer, though such share did not amount to a patti in the sense of a definite division of a mehal. *BALU NATH v. of a village area into separate mehals for which no new wajib-ul-urz is drawn up, the old wajib-ul-urz for the whole area has been held to apply generally to the new mehals, and such division has been held not to affect covenants existing between the co-sharers under such wajib-ul-urz, distinguished from cases where a new wajib-ul-urz has after the division been drawn up for each mehal. *Gokal Singh v. 53. ——— Effect of perfect partition—Wajib-ul-urz—Co-sharers—Purchase of equity of redemption by mortgagee in possession—Acquiescence—Equitable estoppel.—The wajib-ul-urz of three villages which originally formed a single mehal gave a right of pre-emption to co-sharers in case of transfers of shares to strangers. Afterwards the shares in these villages were made the subject of a perfect partition and divided into separate mehals. Subsequently, by two deeds of sale executed on the 18th January 1884, and registered on the 17th January 1884, some of the original co-sharers sold to strangers their shares in all three villages. At the time of the sale, the shares in two of the villages were in possession of the vendees under a possessory mortgage, the amount due upon which was set off against the purchase money. The share in the third village was, at the time of the sale, in possession of another of the original co-sharers under a possessory mortgage. On the 17th January 1885 this last-mentioned co-sharer brought a suit against the vendors and the vendees to enforce his right of pre-emption under the wajib-ul-urz in respect of the shares sold in the three villages. Held that, notwithstanding the partition of the village into separate mehals, the existing wajib-ul-urz at the time of partition must be presumed to subsist and govern the separate mehals until it was shown that a new one had been made. *Gokal Singh v. Mannu Lal, I. L. R., 7 All., 772, referred to. Held also that the Court below was wrong in holding that the plaintiff, by reason of his having omitted in a suit previously brought against him for redemption of his mortgage, and dismissed for want of jurisdiction, to set up in defence any right of pre-emption or to express any desire to purchase, was equitably estopped by acquiescence in the sale from asserting his pre-emptive right. 63. ——— Sale to a co-sharer and stranger—Specification of interest sold to stranger, and price—Right of pre-emption of vendee co-sharer.—The principle of denying the right of pre-emption, except as to the whole of the property sold, is that by breaking up the bargain the pre-emptor would be at liberty to take the best portion of the property and leave the worst part of it with the vendee. The rule applies only to those transactions which, while contained in one deed, cannot be broken up or separated. It should be limited to such transactions, and the reason of it does not exist where the shares sold are separately specified, and the sale to the stranger is distinct and divisible, though contained in the same deed as the sale to the co-sharers. the same patti as the vendor. The deed contained a specification of the interests purchased and the considerations paid by the co-sharers and the stranger vendees respectively. In a suit for pre-emption by certain co-sharers of the same patti as the vendor, the lower Appellate Court held that, although the co-sharers-vendees had a pre-emptive right of the same degree as the plaintiffs, nevertheless they, having joined a stranger with them in purchasing the property, had forfeited their right, and could not resist the claim even in respect of such portions as they had purchased under the sale-deed. Held that this view was erroneous, and that, inasmuch as the deed of sale contained an exact specification of the shares purchased by the co-sharers-vendees, who had an equal right of purchase to that of the plaintiffs in respect of such shares, and as the shares purchased and the consideration paid by the stranger vendee were also exactly specified, the lower Court should not have decreed the claim for pre-emption as to that portion of the property which had been purchased by the co-sharers. *Shroobharos Rai v. 67. ———— Claim based upon custom—Evidence afforded by obsolete wajib-ul-urz—Rules of the Board of Revenue for the settlement of the Gorakhpur and Basti districts (B. E. C., 8-1, s. 38).—The plaintiffs brought their suit in 1890 to pre-empt certain property situated in the Gorakhpur district. Their claim was based upon two grounds: one, an alleged contract said to be recorded in and proved by a wajib-ul-urz of 1860 relating to the village in question; and the other, a custom of pre-emption alleged to be existing in the village. The period during which the wajib-ul-urz of 1860 was in force expired prior to the sale which gave rise to the right of pre-emption sought to be enforced. Subsequently to the expiration of that wajib-ul-urz, certain rules had been framed, with reference to the settlement of the Gorakhpur and Basti districts, the material portions of which, for the purposes of the present case, were as follows: "A memorandum of the village customs will be appended to each khewat by the Assistant Settlement Officer, when he verifies the jamabandi, and it will take the place of the document hitherto known as the wajib-ul-urz" * * * "In regard to any custom or constitution peculiar to the mehal, the following matters should be noticed: class (d), s. 25]: (a) Pre-emption (as regards mehals which belong to other than Mahomedan proprietors) when the proprietors expressly demand that it may be noted and proved conclusively that the custom exists." At the new settlement made in accordance with these rules, no mention of the right of pre-emption as obtaining in the mehal in question was recorded. Upon these facts it was held by EDGE, C.J., and BURKITT, J., that having regard to the rules above-mentioned framed by the Board of Revenue for the settlement of the Gorakhpur and Basti districts, the mere absence of any mention of the right of pre-emption in the new memorandum of village customs was in itself no evidence that the custom of pre-emption had ceased to exist, and that the wajib-ul-urz of 1860 might be used as evidence of the existence of such a custom. Per AIKMAN, J.—The absence from the new memorandum of village customs of any mention of the existence of a right of pre-emption was a circumstance which the Court would be entitled to take into consideration in any conflict of evidence as to whether or not the custom of pre-emption did exist. SADHU SARK v. 68. —Wajib-ul-urz—Custom—Mahomedan Law—Immediate and confirmatory demands.—The wajib-ul-urz of a village gave a right of pre-emption "according to the usage of the country." In a suit for pre-emption, there was no evidence to show what in fact was the usage prevailing in the district in regard to pre-emption. There was no evidence that the plaintiff had satisfied the requirements of the Mahomedan law as to immediate and confirmatory demands, or that there was any custom which absolved him from compliance with those requirements, or that he was at any time willing to pay the actual contract price. Held that, in the absence of evidence of any special custom different from or not co-extensive with the Mahomedan law of pre-emption, that law must be applied to the case, and that, under the circumstances above stated, the suit failed, and must be dismissed. *Fakir Rasool v. 69. —Pre-emptor out of possession of his share—His own share lost by him pending appeal.—The plaintiff instituted this suit to enforce her right of pre-emption in respect of a share in a village of which she alleged she was a co-sharer with the vendors. The defendants to the suit were the vendors, the vendees, and others who were rival claimants for pre-emption in the share sold. The rival pre-emptors alone defended the action on the ground, among others, that plaintiff was not in possession of her own share in the village out of which she alleged that her right to claim pre-emption arose. The Court of first instance dismissed her suit. On appeal, the District Judge in effect dismissed her claim as against the defendants who were the rival pre-emptors, but gave the plaintiff a right to obtain the share if the other pre-emptors did not avail themselves of the decree which they had obtained in their action. On the 12th of January 1887 plaintiff's second appeal was admitted, and on the 20th January plaintiff's share in the village out of which her claim to pre-emption in respect of the share sold arose was sold in execution of a decree in another suit. Respondent contended that, as since the appeal the share out of which plaintiff alleged that her right arose was sold, she could not get any decree now in her favour.

Held that this Court as a Court of appeal has only got to see what was the decree which the Court of first instance should have passed, and if the Court of first instance had wrongly dismissed the claim, the plaintiff cannot be prejudiced by her share having been subsequently sold in execution in another suit; such a sale could not have affected her right to maintain the decree, if she had obtained a decree in her favour in the Court of first instance, either on review or on appeal, nor could it have been made the ground of appeal. Further, plaintiff being out of possession of her share at the time she instituted the suit for pre-emption was immaterial, the Court should have ascertained whether the plaintiff was at the date of suit entitled in law to the share out of which her right of pre-emption was alleged to have arisen. Held by MAHMOOD, J., that the passage from Hamilton's Hedaya by Grady, p. 562, means that in the pre-emptive tenement the pre-emptor should have a vested ownership and not a mere expectancy of inheritance or a reversionary or any kind of contingent right, or any interest falling short of full ownership. SAKINA BIBI v. In August 1885 the mortgagee instituted a suit for possession of the mortgaged property. On the 19th September 1885, the suit was compromised, the mortgagee accepting a part of the mortgaged property, and relinquishing the remainder. A decree was passed in the terms of the compromise. Subsequently, a suit for pre-emption was brought against the mortgagor and mortgagee to enforce pre-emption in respect of the alienation. The plaintiff claimed to pre-empt the whole of the property to which the deed of 1878 related, including the portion relinquished by the conditional vendee under the compromise and decree of the 19th September 1885. Held that, although upon the expiration of the year of grace, the ownership of mortgaged property vested in a conditional vendee, even though he might not have obtained a decree establishing or declaring his right, and the right of pre-emption accrued on the date when the conditional sale thus became absolute, yet foreclosure proceedings under the Regulation, being of a purely ministerial character, were not conclusive or even prima facie evidence in a subsequent litigation against the conditional vendor that a valid foreclosure had been duly effected; that strict observance of the requirements of the Regulation were conditions precedent to the right of foreclosure; and that, in the present case, as the plaintiff had not asserted or attempted to prove that all those requirements had been fulfilled so as to result in an actual foreclosure and consequent accrual of pre-emption at the end of the year of grace, no foreclosure was shown to have taken place prior to the compromise of the 19th September 1885, and the plaintiff's right of pre-emption accrued on and must be referred to that date, and consequently extended only to the property to which the compromise related, and the price payable by the plaintiff was the amount specified in the compromise. *Bhads Mahomed v. 72. ——— Presumption of compliance with conditions of law—Intention of parties.—Held that, where a pre-emptive claim is based on the wajib-ul-urz, it is not to be assumed that the claimant of pre-emption complied with the peculiar conditions which, under the Mahomedan law, are essential to give validity to such a claim, unless expressly provided by the wajib-ul-urz, and the Court construing such contracts ought to consider the intention of the parties as expressed in those contracts, and to give effect to them without alteration or addition. *CHOWDHRY BILU LALL v. 74. ——— Wajib-ul-urz not signed by lambardar or co-sharers.—Where a wajib-ul-urz was not signed by the lambardar or by any of the co-sharers of the village for which it was framed, but was found to have been in existence without having been questioned by any of the parties who might have been affected thereby for a period of some thirteen years,—Held, that the wajib-ul-urz might be taken as prima facie evidence of the custom of the village for which it was framed. The said wajib-ul-urz contained a clause relative to pre-emptive rights to the following effect: "When any musafidar in the patti desires to transfer his share, then first a shareholder in the patti takes it, and if he does not take it, then another man who desires to take it takes it." Held that this clause was declaratory of the village custom, and that it was not intended thereby to adopt the Mahomedan law of pre-emption. *RUSTOM AMI KHAN v. 76. ——— Bhai-band—Suit to enforce the right of pre-emption—Non-joinder of vendor—Mortgage.—In a suit for pre-emption it was objected by the vendee in second appeal that the vendor had not been made a party. Held that, whether the omission to make the vendor a party in a suit to enforce the right of pre-emption renders the suit unmaintainable or not, as the vendee had not been prejudiced by such omission in this case, the objection taken at such a late stage of the case could not be allowed. Held also that the word "bhai-band" in the wajib-ul-urz in this case meant the brotherhood of the village, and not merely those persons who were related by blood. *S. 79. Co-sharers—Members of joint Hindu family.—The members of a joint and undivided Hindu family, other than that member who is recorded in the Collector's book as a sharer in the mehal, are "co-sharers," for the purposes of pre-emption, in the sense of the wajib-ul-urz. GANDHARP SINGH v. SAHIB SINGH . I. L. R., 7 All., 184

80. "Ek jaddi."—The wajib-ul-urz of a village gave a right of pre-emption in cases of sale to "brothers," and provided that, on refusal by a "brother" there should be a right of pre-emption in favour of co-sharers in the thoke who were related to the vendor by descent from a common ancestor ("hissadaran ek jaddi thoke"). It was also provided that, in the event of any dispute arising as to price, it should be settled by arbitration, and that, "if the co-sharers do not take at the amount fixed by the arbitrators," the co-sharers desiring to sell might make the transfer to a stranger. Held that co-sharers who were not of common descent from the vendor were entitled to pre-emption after own brothers and co-sharers ek jaddi and to have preference over strangers. Guneshee Lal v. 82. "Karibi." Meaning of.—The word "karibi" used by itself in the pre-emptive clause of a wajib-ul-urz to indicate shareholders "near" to the vendor, is ambiguous and inadequate to express the intentions of the shareholders. The pre-emptive clause in the wajib-ul-urz of a village gave a right of pre-emption, in cases of sale by shareholders, first to "bhai hakiki" (own brothers), next to "karibi" (near), and next to co-sharers in the same thoke as the vendor. Held that, although the word "karibi" must be read in connection with the preceding word "bhai," the words "bhai karibi" could not reasonably be confined to cousins, but must be construed as meaning "bhai buand" or "bhai log," so as to include all near relatives, both male and female. Held also that a vendor's father's brother's widow, holding a share in the village absolutely and as heir of her deceased husband, was entitled to pre-emption in preference to the vendees, who were only sharers in the same thoke as the vendor. KHUMAN SINGH v. of a wajib-ul-urz its operation is limited to the period of the settlement, a right of pre-emption created by it cannot be enforced after the expiry of that period, unless a provision has been made for that purpose, or the operation of the wajib-ul-urz has been extended by the agreement of the parties. RUITUN SINGH v. 86. Right of pre-emption of co-sharer—Holder of resumed musafi—N. W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), s. 62—Rules of the Board of Revenue, 1870, Department I, Rules 80 and 51.—The plaintiff, a co-sharer in the village of Deobarampur, sued for pre-emption of certain land, being "resumed revenue-free land" in the village, which had been sold to a stranger. The clause of the wajib-ul-urz under which pre-emption was claimed was as follows: "When any co-sharer (hissadar) is bent upon selling or mortgaging his right (haqqiyat), then first that co-sharer who is nearest to the sharer bent on transfer can take it; after that any other person who is interested (sharik) in the village rank by rank can take it. If no person interested in the village takes it, then a stranger may take it. Held that, under the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff had no right of pre-emption in respect of the land claimed by him, the vendor not being, within the meaning of the wajib-ul-urz, a co-sharer in the village by virtue of his possession of a portion of the resumed musafi. KALLIAN MAL v. MADAN MOHAN . I. L. R., 17 All., 447

87. Procedure of co-sharer who wishes to sell share.—By the clause in a wajib-ul-urz which related to pre-emption, it was provided as follows: When any co-sharer wishes to make a sale or mortgage of his share, it is incumbent on him to do so, first, in favour of a near co-sharer; next, in favour of a co-sharer of his thoke; and lastly, in favour of a co-sharer of another thoke, at the rate of Rs 20 per bigha of cultivated land and Rs 5 per bigha of waste land. If none of these take it, then he may transfer it to an outsider. If any co-sharer (i. e., any co-sharer who wishes to sell or mortgage) fail to act as above directed, another co-sharer has the right of enforcing pre-emption in respect of the property. If the term of the mortgaged share of any co-sharer is about to expire and notice of foreclosure has been issued, and the co-sharer mortgagor has not the means to redeem, then another co-sharer, after paying up the money, may take back the share, and when the original mortgagor has the means, he, after paying the money, may take possession of the share. Held that, in the case of a conditional sale of property to which this wajib-ul-urz applied, there were only two stages contemplated by the wajib-ul-urz, and not three. The first stage was at or about the time of the execution of the deed of conditional sale, and at that time pre-emption might be had by a co-sharer at the rate indicated in the wajib-ul-urz. The second stage was when the conditional vendee had brought his suit for foreclosure, and at that time the pre-emptor would have to pay the amount found to be due under the deed of conditional sale. When once, however, the order for foreclosure had been made absolute, the co-sharer's right of pre-emption was gone and extinguished. GYA BHARTI v. LAKHNATH RAI . . . I. L. R., 20 All., 108

92. — Shareholders, Right of—Relatives, Right of—Strangers.—One of the provisions in the wajib-ul-urz of a village was that, when a shareholder was desirous of selling his share, the right of purchase should lie, first, with the real brother of the shareholder; secondly, with the nearest relatives; thirdly, with the shareholders in the thoke; and lastly, with the shareholders in other thokes. Held that, if a person was a near relative, he fulfilled all the conditions required, and there was no necessity that he should belong to the same thoke as the vendor. Heli, also, where the parties were Mahomedans, that the wife of the vendor must be regarded as a near relative within the meaning of the wajib-ul-urz, and that, though she was not a shareholder, she could not be considered a stranger, that is, a person who had no interest whatever in the family. *MAHOMED TURK v. 93. — Partition, Effect of—Co-sharers—"Village"—Effect of perfect partition on co-ventures contained in the wajib-ul-urz.—The wajib-ul-urz of a village contained a covenant among the co-sharers that, in the event of any one of them selling his share, a right of pre-emption should be enforceable, first, by a "near shareholder"; next, by a partner in the thoke; and thirdly, by a partner in the village. The village was subsequently divided into three separate mehals by means of a perfect partition under the N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873). Held that the agreement regarding pre-emption remained in force after the partition. The term "village," as used in the wajib-ul-urz, means a definite area of land with houses upon it, and does not necessarily imply a joint ownership of such land, inasmuch as after partition there may remain some community of interest, and things held and used in common by all the inhabitants. Every one who lives in that area has a share in it, and may therefore be regarded as a "shareholder" within the meaning of the wajib-ul-urz. GOKAL SINGH v. MANPU LAL . . . [I. L. 94. — Perfect partition of mahal—N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), s. 191—No new wajib-ul-urz framed on partition—Pre-emption claimed under wajib-ul-urz of undivided mahal—Custom—Co-sharers—Hissadar deh.—Where, on the perfect partition of a mahal under the N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act, 1873, no new wajib-ul-urz has been framed for any of the new mehals, the question whether or how far a contract or a custom of pre-emption recorded in the wajib-ul-urz of the undivided mahal is still in force, or who is entitled to claim the benefit of it, is not capable of any absolute or invariable answer. It depends in each case upon the proper construction of the terms of the particular contract or the proper interpretation of the particular custom recorded, assuming that there is no evidence of any intention on the part of the co-sharers at the time of partition to put an end to the contract or the custom. But there is a strong presumption against such claims for pre-emption when made after perfect partition by persons who are no longer co-sharers of the vendor; and where the language of the wajib-ul-urz is ambiguous, this presumption may be decisive. The wajib-ul-urz of a village forming one undivided mehal recorded a right of pre-emption by custom as existing in favour of "hissadar deh" in cases of transfer by a "hissadar" of his share or "hissa" to a stranger. After a perfect partition, on which no new wajib-ul-urz was framed, and after a subsequent sale to a stranger of land in one of the new mehals, a person who, prior to the partition, was a co-sharer of the vendor in the undivided mehal, but who, since the partition, owned a share only in another of the new mehals, claimed pre-emption under the old wajib-ul-urz as a "hissadar deh." Held by the Full Bench, upon the construction of the wajib-ul-urz, that he was not entitled to pre-emption.

95. — Division of lands in village
—Right of sharer in one division to right of pre-emption of share in another division.—The greater portion of the lands of a certain village were divided into "thokes," each thoke comprising a certain amount of land, and the rest of the lands were held in common according to the interest of the co-sharers in the village. The wajib-ul-urz contained the following provision regarding the right of pre-emption: "Each sharer is by all means at liberty to transfer his right and share, but first of all the transfer should be effected by him in favour of his own brothers and nephews who may be sharers, and, in case of their refusal, in favour of the other owners of the thoke." Held, in a suit by a sharer in one thoke to enforce a right of pre-emption, under the wajib-ul-urz, in respect of a share in another thoke, that the fact that the plaintiff in common with all the sharers of the different thokes was a sharer in the common lands did not make her a sharer in the vendor's thoke, and she had therefore no right of pre-emption under the wajib-ul-urz. *MAYA RAM v. In 1875 the conditional sale in favour of B became absolute, and he was recorded as proprietor of half the share of the vendors, and obtained possession thereof. In 1883 A foreclosed his mortgage and obtained possession of the other half share. B thereupon claimed the right to purchase the half share so acquired by A on the allegation that he had a right of pre-emption in respect thereof, having become the vendee in 1875 of the other half share, and therefore being the "nearer co sharer" of the vendors within the meaning of the wajib-ul-urz, and also being nearer in relationship to the vendors than A. The wajib-ul-urz provided that each co-sharer was competent to transfer his own share, but that, when making a transfer, it was incumbent on him to notify the same to his near co-sharer, and, on his refusal, to other sharers in the village. The lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff was estopped from preferring a claim to pre-emption on the ground that he had acquiesced in the conditional sale in favour of the defendant, and also that he had no right to pre-emption under the wajib-ul-urz. Held that, inasmuch as from 1875 to 1883 the only owners of the 2 annas 8 pies share were the plaintiff and the mortgagors, they were the only co-sharers in respect of this particular share, although there were other co-sharers in the village; that the plaintiff must therefore be regarded as a "nearer co-sharer" of the vendors than the defendant within the meaning of the wajib-ul-urz, and that as such he was entitled to claim pre-emption. Held also that the right of pre-emption which arose upon the sale was a new right, and not the same as that which arose at the time of the mortgage, inasmuch as the wajib-ul-urz distinctly contemplated the right of pre-emption as arising upon the two different events of mortgage and sale; that the alleged acquiescence of the plaintiff pre-emptor therefore occurred at a time when the right claimed by him was not yet in existence; and that consequently the claim was not barred. *RUP NARAIN v. 99. ——— Simple mortgage—"Transfer"—Mortgage—Charge—Act IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property Act), s. 58.—The wajib-ul-urz of a village gave a right of pre-emption to co-sharers on a transfer (intikal) by sale or mortgage (rahn) by a co-sharer of "rights and interests" (hakkiyat). Per PETHERAM, C.J.—That as a simple mortgage, as defined in s. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, by giving a right to sell, transfers an interest in the property mortgaged, a simple mortgage of his share by a co-sharer created a right of pre-emption under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz. Per MAHMOOD, J.—The circumstance that possession had not been transferred to the mortgagee was one which had no bearing on the question whether a right of pre-emption arose under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz in the case of a simple mortgage. The word "intikal," as used in Hindustani, has the broadest meaning in connection with "alienation," "conveyance," "assignment," or "transfer" of rights in immoveable property. The word "hakkiyat" means rights and interests in the legal sense of the phrase. The word "rahn" is a generic word indicating all that is included in the English word "mortgage," and is not limited to usufructuary mortgages, but includes simple mortgages also. When general words are used in a document, they must be understood in a general sense, unless they are accompanied by any expression limiting or restricting their ordinary meaning, or unless such limitation or restriction arises from necessary implication. The words "intikal," "hakkiyat," and "rahn" in the wajib-ul-urz could be understood only in the most general sense. "Mortgage," as understood in Indian law, includes simple mortgage as well as usufructuary, and one is as much a "transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property" as the other. A simple mortgage is a "transfer," being the transfer of the right of sale. Held, therefore, by MAHMOOD, J., that a right of pre-emption accrued under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz in the case of a simple mortgage by a co-sharer of his share to a "stranger." Per BRODHURST, J., that one of the entries in a statement showing the transfers which had taken place in the village at or about the time the wajib-ul-urz was framed, which statement was connected with the wajib-ul-urz, related to a simple mortgage, from which it appeared that it was the intention that the co-sharers should have the right of pre-emption in all cases of mortgage, whether usufructuary or otherwise, and therefore a right of pre-emption accrued under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz in the case of a simple mortgage. Per DUTHOIT, J., that a pre-emptive right was raised by the terms of the wajib-ul-urz only upon the occurrence of a transfer of a share in the property of the mehal, and a simple mortgage was not a transfer of property. OLDFIELD, J.—The word "transfer" used in the wajib-ul-urz was not intended to refer to a simple mortgage, but to mortgages where possession of the property passes to the mortgagee. *SHORATAN KUAR v. 101. ——— Conditional sale.—The pre-emptive rights of the parties to a deed of conditional sale cannot be affected by a wajib-ul-urz prepared subsequently to the execution of the deed of conditional sale, but prior to the sale becoming absolute, they not being parties to the wajib-ul-urz, and the wajib-ul-urz not apparently indicating any pre-existing custom of pre-emption in the village. Raghubir Singh v. Nandu Singh, Weekly Notes, All., 1891, p. 184, distinguished. BHOJAN RAI v. NAND KISHORE RAI . . . I. L. R., 14 All., 341

102. ——— Sale without registration of transfer—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 54—Fraudulent omission to transfer by registered instrument.—The wajib-ul-urz of a village gave the co-sharers a right of pre-emption in cases where any one of them should wish to "transfer his share wholly or partly by sale or mortgage." One of the co-sharers entered into a transaction by which he transferred the possession of his share to a stranger for Rs 300 and had mutation of names effected in the Revenue Department, but, in order to avoid the right of pre-emption, the parties omitted to execute or register a deed of sale in respect of the transfer. Held by the Full Bench (MAHMOOD, J., dissenting) that the transaction gave rise to the right of pre-emption within the meaning of the wajib-ul-urz. Per PETHERAM, C.J., that the terms of the wajib-ul-urz meant that, if any co-sharer transferred his right wholly or partly, the right of pre-emption should arise; that although the legal interest in the share was never transferred, the effect of the transaction in question was to transfer absolutely the whole right of possession from the vendor to the vendee, and that it was therefore such a transfer as let in the right of pre-emption. Per STRAIGHT, J., that, inasmuch as the defendants deliberately omitted to observe the necessary legal formality of a registered instrument with the object of defeating the pre-emptive right, it was very doubtful whether a Court of equity would be justified in allowing them to set up, and in giving effect to, a defence based upon their own intentional evasion of the law. Per OLDFIELD and BRODHURST, JJ., that the failure of the parties to the transfer to comply with the requirements of s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) as to the manner in which the transfer should be made did not alter the nature of the transaction or affect the fact that a sale had been made, and could not affect a pre-emptor's right in respect of it. Per MAHMOOD, J., that a valid and perfected sale was a condition precedent to the exercise of the pre-emptive right; that in the present case nothing had happened which could properly be termed a "sale" within the meaning of the wajib-ul-urz; that the application for mutation of names not having been registered, the provisions of s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act prevented it from taking effect as a sale, or passing the ownership from the vendor to the vendee; and that therefore, under the wajib-ul-urz, the right of pre-emption could not arise. JANKI v. GIRJADAT [I. L. R., 7 All., 482]

103. ——— Calculation of price, Mode of—Proportionate share of purchase-money.—The wajib-ul-urz of a village contained this clause regarding the transfer of shares by sale or mortgage, viz., "Whenever a shareholder intends to transfer his rights, his nearest co-sharer shall be first entitled to purchase the same, and on his refusal the other sharers in the thoke, and on their refusal sharers in other thokes, will be entitled." S, the proprietor of a 4 pies share in one thoke and of a 9 pies share in another thoke, sold both shares, together with a bungalow, garden, and factory situated on the land comprised in the 4 pies share, for ₹10,000 to T and others, shareholders in the thoke containing the 9 pies share. D and others, shareholders in the thoke containing the 4 pies share, sued to obtain possession of that share and the bungalow, garden, and factory, claiming the right of pre-emption under the wajib-ul-urz, on payment of a proportionate part of the purchase-money, which they estimated at four-thirteenths of that sum, calculating the numbers of pies sold. It was held (in accordance with the opinion of the Full Bench) that the plaintiffs were entitled to claim the right of pre-emption in respect of the 4 pies share to the exclusion of the 9 pies. It was also held that the right of pre-emption did not extend to the bungalow, garden, and factory. Instead of adopting the plaintiffs' mode of calculating the price payable for the property claimed, the lower Courts should have ascertained separately the value of the several properties sold. SALIG RAM v. DEBI PARSHAD. 7 N. W., 38.

105. ——— Dispute as to price—Arrangement between vendor and vendee.—In a suit to establish a right of pre-emption to property which had been sold, in which the plaintiff alleged that the actual value was different from that which was recited in the deed of sale between the defendants, the vendor and vendee,—Held that plaintiff was entitled to have the property at the price agreed upon between the vendor and the vendee, but not to the benefit of an arrangement by which a portion of the price had been allowed to remain in the hands of the vendee that he might pay off a mortgage-debt. GOLAM AYHYA v. JOY MUNGUL SINGH. 13 W. R., 435

106. ——— Rights of pre-emptor—Sale contract—Deduction of amount recovered by vendee.—A pre-emptor is entitled to all the benefit which the vendee takes under the contract of sale. Held therefore, where a certain sum was fixed as the price of the property, and such sum was paid by the vendee, but it was subsequently agreed between him and the vendor, as part of the sale-contract, that the vendee should recover for his own benefit certain moneys due to the vendor at the time of the sale, and the vendee recovered such moneys, that the pre-emptor was entitled to a deduction of the amount of such moneys from the sum originally fixed as the price of the property. TAJAMMUL HUSAIN v. UDA [I. L. R., 3 All., 668]

107. ——— Bad title of vendor as to part of property—Pre-emptor and preferential pre-emptor.—Certain persons sold an 8-anna share of a village. G sued the vendors and purchasers of the share to enforce his right of pre-emption in respect of the sale, and obtained a decree. M, claiming 1 anna 4 pies of the share as his property, sued the vendors and purchasers of the share and G for such 1 anna 4 pies, and obtained a decree. He then sued the same parties to enforce his right of pre-emption in respect of the remainder of the share, that is, 6 annas 8 pies, claiming to pay only a proportionate amount of the price paid for the whole share. Held that M was not bound to pay the price paid for the whole share but only the proportionate amount of such price. MUHAMMAD LATIF v. GOBIND SINGH [I. L. R., 5 All., 382]

108. ——— Amount of purchase-money—Mortgage by conditional sale—Reg. XVII of 1806, s. 8—Foreclosure.—Held that a proceeding under Regulation XVII of 1806 for foreclosing a mortgage by conditional sale was not conclusive as to the amount of the mortgage-money against persons subsequently claiming to enforce a right of pre-emption and raising the question as to the amount of the purchase-money. Firles v. Amceeroonnissa Begum, 10 Moore's I. A., 340, referred to. Also that, on general principles, a decree in a suit to foreclose a mortgage by conditional sale cannot bind a person not a party to the suit claiming to enforce a right of pre-emption and raising a similar question. Held also that a person claiming a right of pre-emption in respect of a mortgage by conditional sale was bound to pay as the price of the property the entire amount due on such mortgage at the time it became absolute. Ashik Ali v. Mathura Kandu, I. L. R., 5 All., 187, followed. TAWAKHUL RAI v. LACHMAN RAI. TAWAKHUL RAI v. SHEO GHULAM . . . I. L. R., 6 All., 341

109.—Arrangement between vendor and vendee as to payment of purchase-money—Right of pre-emptor to stand in the position of the purchaser.—A co-sharer of a village sold part of his share to a stranger. This sale was subject to a right of pre-emption created by the wajib-ul-urz in favour of the partners of the vendor. Only a part of the purchase-money was paid in cash, it being agreed that the balance should remain on credit, and be secured by two deeds in which the property was hypothecated by the purchaser to the vendor. Held that it could not be said that the partners of the vendor had not only the right of pre-emption, but also the right to be put in the same position with reference to all the peculiar incidents of the payment of the purchase-money as that arranged between the vendor and purchaser. NIHAL SINGH v. KOKAL SINGH

[I. L. R., 8 All., 29]

110.—Concealment by vendor and vendee of actual price—Evidence—Market value.—In suits for pre-emption, where the Court has come to the conclusion that the price alleged in the deed of sale is not the true contract price, and where it cannot ascertain the true price by reason either that the vendor and vendee refuse to disclose the same by their own evidence or their evidence cannot be believed, the Court should ascertain, if possible, what was the market price of the property in dispute at the time of the sale, and accept that market price as the probable price agreed upon between the parties. It is for the plaintiff either to show what was the actual contract price or to give substantial evidence on which the Court can act, showing what was the market value at the time of the sale. AGAR SINGH v. RAGHURAJ SINGH

[I. L. R., 9 All., 471]

111.—Clause in wajib-ul-urz fixing price in case of sale to a co-sharer—Vendor and purchaser—Sale to a stranger for higher price—Agreement running with land—Pre-emptor entitled to take property on payment of price fixed in wajib-ul-urz—Purchaser entitled to recover purchase-money.—The wajib-ul-urz of a village contained a provision that any co-sharer desiring to sell his share should offer it to the other co-sharers before selling it to a stranger, and further that, in case of sale to a co-sharer, the price to be paid should be calculated in proportion to the price for which a particular share had been sold, in 1860. One of the co-sharers, without first offering his share to the other co-sharers, sold it to a stranger, for a price higher than that which would be payable according to the above-mentioned provision. A suit for pre-emption was brought by a co-sharer against the vendor and the purchaser, and the plaintiff claimed the benefit of the sale upon payment of a sum calculated according to the condition of the wajib-ul-urz relating to sales between co-sharers. Held by the Full Bench that the condition of the wajib-ul-urz regarding the price to be paid for the share was still binding on the land, notwithstanding the sale; that a co-sharer was entitled to purchase the share at the price agreed before it could be sold to anyone else, and in case of sale to a stranger could call on the vendor and the purchaser to hand it over on payment of such price; and that, if the stranger vendee had paid more than was payable according to the wajib-ul-urz, he was entitled to recover it from the vendor. *Akbar Singh v. [I. L. R., 8 All., 102]

112.—Agreement running with the land—Pre-emptor entitled to take property on payment of price fixed in wajib-ul-urz.—The pre-emptive clause in the wajib-ul-urz of a village contained a provision that the right of pre-emption could be enforced on payment of such sum as would represent the "kimat i-murav vajah," that is according to current rates. A suit for pre-emption was brought against the vendor and vendee of a certain fractional share in the village, and the plaintiff claiming the benefit of the above provision disputed the price entered in the sale-deed as the proper price for the share according to current rates. Held, following Karim Baksh Khan v. Phula Bibi, I. L. R., 8 All., 102, that a co-sharer was entitled to purchase the share sold at a price to be ascertained according to the rule in that behalf contained in the wajib-ul-urz, and the condition in the wajib-ul-urz regarding the price to be paid for the share sold was binding on the land and therefore binding on the stranger vendee. *UPMANI KUAR v. 113.—Application for refund of money paid into Court by a successful plaintiff in a suit for pre-emption, the decree having been set aside on appeal—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 583—Interest.—A plaintiff in a pre-emption suit obtained a decree and paid into Court the pre-emptive price as stated in that decree, and the money was drawn out of Court by the vendor. Subsequently the decree was reversed on appeal, and the plaintiff then applied under s. 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for a refund of the money paid into Court as above described with interest. Held that the pre-emptor was entitled to a refund of the money together with interest up to date of repayment. *Rogers v. decree for pre-emption paid the decreed pre-emptive price into Court. A creditor of the decree-holder applied for attachment of the money so paid in, and ultimately was allowed by the Court to withdraw a portion of it. After the decree for pre-emption had been confirmed in appeal, the pre-emptor applied for possession of the pre-empted property. Held that the decree-holder was entitled to obtain possession, and that it was not competent to the Court to pay out to any one but the person entitled to it under the decree for pre-emption any portion of the pre-emptive price, so long as the decree for pre-emption was not modified or reversed in appeal. ABDUS SALAM v. 115. ——— Calculation of price—Covenant for pre-emption, Breach of—Suit to enforce covenant.—Four brothers, on making a partition of their joint property, covenanted with each other that if any one of them, or their heirs, had to sell his share, he should offer to sell the same to one of the co-sharers. One of the brothers having died, his widow sold his share which she had inherited without such an offer to the surviving brothers, who thereupon sued her and her vendee for possession up n payment of what they alleged to be the value of the property (vis., R27). The Munsif found the value to be greater (vis., R95), and set aside the sale without giving possession. The lower Appellate Court made an order that, if plaintiffs deposited R95 in Court, their appeal would be decreed. The plaintiffs deposited the amount, and a decree for possession was given them. Held that neither of the Courts had the power to make the decrees which they did; and the order of the lower Appellate Court to deposit the money was not binding on the plaintiffs, who had no right under their contract to an election, after the value had been ascertained, whether they would purchase at that price or not. Quere—Can a perpetual covenant as to the disposition of land be enforced? TRIPOORA SOONDUREE v. 116. ——— Conditional decree—Appeal—Costs—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 214, 538.—A Court of first instance decreed a claim for pre-emption conditionally, on the pre-emptor paying into Court R125 within a specified period, and also awarded the pre-emptor R39-9-0 as his costs in the suit. Within the specified period the pre-emptor paid into Court the R125, and subsequently executed his decree for costs, by drawing out therefrom the R39-9-0. After this, the decree was modified on appeal, the Appellate Court raising the R125 payable as the condition of pre-emption to R200, and reversing the first Court's order as to costs. Within the period specified in the Appellate Court's decree, the pre-emptor paid into Court the further sum of R75. Subsequently the vendee, defendant, applied to the Court under s. 533 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the property in suit restored to him, contending that the pre-emptor had failed to pay the full R200 within the prescribed period. Held by STRAIGHT, J., affirming the judgment of MAHMOOD, J., that this contention must fail; that the payment of R125 due under the first Court's decree could not be said to have been reduced by the pre-emptor subsequently executing against the amount so paid the order of that Court in his favour for costs, and that the subsequent payment of R75 within the period prescribed by the Appellate Court satisfied the requirements of that Court's decree, subject to the judgment-debtor's right to recover the costs realized in execution of the first Court's decree. Held by TYRRELL, J., contra, that, although the pre-emptor had once made a payment, which for a few days was a compliance with the first Court's decree, such compliance became immaterial when that decree was modified on appeal, and as he had never had in any Court a credit for R200, as required by the Appellate Court's decree, which alone was the decree in the cause, he had failed to fulfil the condition essential to pre-emption, and therefore the defendant's application should be allowed. BALMUKAND v. A co-sharer, who had a right of pre-emption in respect of the sale, made no objection to this application, and the partition was effected. The co-sharer afterwards set up a claim to pre-emption. The plaintiff paid in a portion only of the pre-emptive price within the time limited by the decree. The defendant appealed. Long after the time prescribed for payment by the original decree had expired, the defendant's appeal was dismissed, but the time for payment was not extended by the Appellate Court's decree. The plaintiff then, after the lapse of a period from the date of the appellate decree in excess of that which had been given him for payment by the decree of the first Court, paid in the balance of the pre-emptive price, which was accepted by the Court. On appeal by the defendant from the Court's order directing the balance of the pre-emptive price to be received, it was held that the order of the Court allowing the payment was without jurisdiction, the decree having, on the expiration of the time limited without payment by the plaintiff, become a decree in favour of the defendant, and the plaintiff having therefore lost his right of pre-emption under it.

5. Easements how created—User—Easement creating damage to servient tenement.—A grant, either express or implied, in prescription, is necessary to establish an easement. Conclusive evidence is required to prove an easement the result of which is great damage to the servient tenement. Without an uninterrupted user, there can be no claim to an easement. ZUMMER ALI v. DOORGA-BUN . . . 1 W. R., 230

10. Uninterrupted enjoyment—Bom. Reg. V of 1827, s. 1, cl. 1.—Held that uninterrupted enjoyment for a period of more than thirty years was necessary in order to acquire a title by prescription to an easement in the mofussil of the Bombay Presidency; the law applicable to such cases being Regulation V of 1827, s. 1, cl. 1, and that Act XIV of 1859 had made no alteration in this respect. ANAJI DATTUSHET v. 11. User—Cases prior to Limitation Act, 1871.—Prior to the passing of the Limitation Act, 1871, in order to give rise to an easement by prescription over immovable property in the island of Bombay, it was necessary for a plaintiff claiming such an easement to prove twenty years' uninterrupted user of it. NAROTAM BAPU v. The period was fixed by the Limitation Act, 1871, s. 27, at twenty years, and that provision has been continued in the present Limitation Act, s. 28.

12. Alterations in property—Severance of tenements—Continuance of easement without grant.—If the alterations which a man makes in his property before alienation of any part of it are palpable and manifest, and in their nature permanent changes in the disposition of the property, so that one part thereof becomes dependent on another, the purchaser of either part must take the land either burdened or benefited, as the case may be, by the qualities thus attached thereto. After the proprietor's demise, his heirs claimed the right and title to the house. Held that the consent of the proprietor, added to the long use of the house by the public, entitled the public by way of implied grant to the occupation of the same as a house for prayer, and the plaintiffs could not succeed. SUFROO SHAIKH DURIEN v. 15. ——— Wall—Adjoining building—Side wall.—A built a house in the rear of B's house. There was a passage between the houses. Over the passage A built a room connecting the two houses. This room corresponded with B's first floor, and had an open terrace on the top of it. The structure by which A connected the two houses was quite independent of B's house. It was supported throughout by wooden pillars adjoining B's wall, which the cross beams did not penetrate or touch. But the structure was built so close to B's wall that the latter served as a side wall to the room. This state of things had existed for upwards of twenty years. Held that A did not acquire any easement over B's wall by merely building on his own ground close to B's house, even though A had built no side wall to his own house, but trusted to B's keeping up his wall to shelter his (A's) house on that side. GORDHAN DALPATRAM v. 20. ——— Right to watan—Bom. Reg. V of 1827, s. 1, cl. 1—Uninterrupted possession.—The plaintiff in 1861 sued to recover his share in a watan. The defendants had been in actual possession of it from 1811 to 1880, when the Government attached the watan and enjoyed its revenues till 1845. In 1846 it was restored to the defendants. Held that the defendants had uninterrupted possession for more than thirty years, under cl. 1 of s. 1 of Regulation V of 1827. LADO LAKSHUMAN v. 21. ——— Right to place tazias on certain plot of land during Moharram—Easements Act (V of 1882), ss. 4 and 18—Customary right—Facts necessary to establish the existence of a customary right.—The plaintiff sued for possession of a piece of land which, he alleged, formed part of the court-yard of his kothi, and for demolition of a chabutra thereon. The defendants denied the plaintiff's title, and alleged that they always used the chabutra as a sitting place, and that during the Moharram the tazias and alums were exhibited upon the chabutra and a takht was placed upon it. The Court of first instance found that the defendants had a right to use the land in the manner claimed during the Moharram. The lower Appellate Court, on the question of the defendants' right to use the said land in the manner claimed by them, found as follows: "That various mirasis whose connexion with each other is not established have within a period of twenty years or so placed tazias upon the land and sung there." Held per AIKMAN, J.—A right to place tazias on a certain plot of land during the Moharram is a right of the nature of the customary easements referred to in s. 18 of Act V of 1882, and may be acquired as such by prescription. Ashraf Ali v. Jagan Nath, I. L. (d) MONEY ALLOWANCE.

22. ——— Allowance attached to hereditary office—Bom. Reg. V of 1827—Immoveable property.—An annual allowance for palki haq to the holder of the hereditary office of desai paid by Government out of the land revenue of a particular pergunnah to successive desais for upwards of thirty years was held not to create a prescriptive title, as such money payment was not "immoveable property" within the meaning of Bombay Regulation V of 1827, s. 1, cl. 1. GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY v. Thus where Government paid a yearly sum of Rs 2-4-6 to a chirda haqdar, by whom no services in return were rendered, from the year 1818 to 1860, and then discontinued such payment to the heir of the last holder, it was held that such yearly payments gave the haqdar no prescriptive rights against Government. COLLECTOR OF SURAT v. tenement, affords such owners a good cause of action. Each case in which such a right is in dispute must be decided upon its own facts, the primary question in all cases being whether the privacy in fact and substantially exists, and has been and in fact enjoyed. If this is answered in the negative, no further question arises. If in the affirmative, the next question is whether the privacy has been substantially interfered with by acts done by the defendant, without the consent or acquiescence of the person seeking relief against such acts. (A) LIGHT AND AIR.

32. ———— Light and air, Right to—Easements to dwelling-house—Use as a dwelling-house.—To acquire by prescription a right to the uninterrupted access of light and air through the windows of a dwelling-house, it is sufficient that the building in respect of which the right is claimed has assumed the appearance and outward aspect of a dwelling-house for more than twenty years before the time of the commencement of the suit, though not completed or used as a dwelling-house for the full period of twenty years before that time. When a building is so far completed as to show an intention to use it as a dwelling-house, with certain windows or openings for light and air, from that time it becomes the duty of those who are concerned in preventing a prescriptive right to the access of light and air from arising in respect of such windows, to take steps to challenge and hinder the acquisition of such right. PHANJIVAN DAS HARJIVAN DAS v. 36. ———— Presumption of lost grant—Positive and negative servitudes—Obstructions—2 & 8 Will. IV., c. 71.—In a suit to remove an obstruction to the enjoyment of light and air and for damages,—Held by MARKEBY, J., that in cases where English law is applicable, the law of prescription is that existing in England prior to the passing of the Prescription Act. Although the enjoyment of light and air as of right for upwards of thirty years is evidence from which an enjoyment from time immemorial may be presumed, yet, inasmuch as the period of legal memory is about 700 years, the claim by prescription in this country is defeated by the fact that English law has only been introduced here for about 200 years. Where an easement has been enjoyed for upwards of twenty years, the presumption of a grant is a question of fact, and not of law. Distinction drawn between positive and negative servitudes. Held by PRACOOK, C.J.—A right to air may be acquired by express grant, but it cannot be acquired merely by presumption arising from user, whether the presumption is a presumption of prescription or not. The only amount of light which can be claimed by prescription or by length of enjoyment, without an actual grant, is such an amount as is reasonably necessary for the convenient and comfortable habitation of the house. The uninterrupted enjoyment of light for twenty years acquiesced in by the owner of the servient tenement raises a presumption of right which, in the absence of any evidence to rebut it, ought to be acted upon by those who have to determine the facts. Such presumption is one of law, and not of fact. Held by NORMAN, J.—Servitudes are known and recognized both in Hindu and Mahomedan law. A right to the unobstructed access of light is not a property or interest in the light itself, nor a right to be enjoyed in or over the soil of the adjacent owner. By analogy to the law of limitation, an adverse and uninterrupted use of an easement for twenty years confers a right to it; therefore, where the access of light and air through the windows of a house has been enjoyed for twenty years, and there is nothing to rebut the presumption of title, the law implies an obligation on the part of an adjoining owner not to interrupt the free access of necessary light and air through such windows. BAGRAM v. KHETTRANATH KARFORMAN [3 B. L. R., O. C., 18]

37. ———— Knowledge and acquiescence—2 & 8 Will. IV., c. 71.—In a suit for enforcing the removal of an obstruction to the alleged right of the plaintiffs to the light and air through certain windows in a room of a house contiguous to the house of the defendants, it was proved that the plaintiffs had purchased the premises in 1847, and that the building of the room in which the windows in question were had been subsequently commenced in 1849; and the Judge of the Court

below found on the evidence that the room and windows had been completed and in use for a period of twenty years prior to the date of suit, May 18th, 1870; that the plaintiffs had enjoyed the light and air through the windows for a period of twenty years without any interruption by the defendants; and it being proved that the defendants had by buildings obstructed the light and air coming to the plaintiff's windows, he granted an injunction commanding the defendants to take down so much of the wall as rose to the height of more than five feet above the level of the plaintiff's floor, and restraining them, the defendants, from continuing their building above the height of five feet. Held on appeal per COWEN, C.J.—By the English law before the Prescription Act (which is the law governing the case), the presumption of a grant, in the case of a claim to the access and use of light for a building, was a presumption of fact, the presumption being founded on the consent or acquiescence of the owner of the servient tenement. Acquiescence implies knowledge, and knowledge may be presumed where the owner is in possession. There must be knowledge for twenty years, at any rate; if the knowledge were for a lesser period, whether there was a grant would be a question of fact, and no presumption could arise. The question of whether or not there was knowledge is one preliminary to the consideration whether or not a grant is to be presumed. Held on the evidence that there had been no knowledge on the part of the defendants during the whole time, and therefore there had not been a twenty years' enjoyment of the light and air with their acquiescence. Held per MARXB, J.—The presumption of a lost grant is one of fact. An uninterrupted user for twenty years would be evidence from which, taken with other circumstances, it might be inferred that a grant had existed. No "patientia," or "submission" on the part of the defendants being shown so as to constitute an acknowledgment of the existence of the right of the plaintiffs to the light and air, the defendants were entitled to succeed. BRUBAN MOHAN BANERJEE v. ELLIOTT 6 B. L. R., 85

Held on appeal to the Privy Council that the law of prescription applicable to India was the English law previous to the passing of the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Will. IV., c. 71. In order to establish a right to light and air, an uninterrupted user of at least twenty years, with the acquiescence of the owner of the servient tenement, must be shown. In a suit to restrain the defendants from obstructing the light and air through certain windows of a house belonging to the plaintiffs, it was shown that the enjoyment of the alleged right began on 14th April 1850, the windows then being in a sufficiently finished state to create the right. In March 1870 the plaintiffs received notice from the defendants of their intention to erect a building which would have the effect of obstructing the passage of light and air through the plaintiffs' windows. The building was actually commenced on 23rd March 1870, but it was not actually raised to such a height as to amount to an obstruction until some days after the twenty years had elapsed. Held that there was not an enjoyment for twenty years with the acquiescence of the defendants such as entitled the plaintiffs to maintain the suit. Quære—Whether proof of constructive knowledge on the part of the defendants would not be sufficient to show their acquiescence. *ELLIOTT v. 38. ————— Act IX of 1871, s. 27—Enjoyment "as of right"—Unity of possession—The English Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. IV., c. 71), s. 3—Grant independent of user.—In a suit to restrain the defendant from obstructing the access of light and air through certain windows of the plaintiff's house, it appeared that both the tenements had formerly constituted the joint property of a Hindu family, and that in 1835 a partition took place among the various members composing it, by which the tenement in the occupation of the plaintiff became separated from that occupied by the defendant; and that the latter property was, in 1860, purchased by the plaintiff jointly with one G, but under the purchase the plaintiff took sole possession thereof; that in 1867, however, he relinquished it in favour of G in pursuance of an award, wherein it was found the plaintiff had no right or title thereto; and that in 1870 it was purchased by the defendant, who, in 1871 and 1872, erected the obstructions complained of by the plaintiff. Held that though, in the interval between 1860 and 1867, the plaintiff had not such an estate in the servient tenement as to constitute unity of title in him to the two tenements, and thereby extinguish all easements between them, yet the unity of possession in the plaintiff during that period excluded the operation of s. 27 of Act IX of 1871, as the enjoyment during that time was not "of right." Semble—In order that the enjoyment should be "of right," there must be an adverse exercise of it as against the servient holder. Act IX of 1871 does not exclude other modes than therein provided of acquiring an easement by enjoyment. In this case, applying the law of prescription in force in Calcutta prior to 1871, which was the English law previous to the passing of 2 & 3 Will. IV., c. 71, a grant might be implied independently of user; and, under the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff was entitled to such right to easements of light and air as can be inferred from enjoyment, i.e., a right to restrain the defendant from committing any act whereby the access of light or air should be so diminished as with respect to air to prove a nuisance or injurious to health, and with respect to light to render the house unfit for comfortable habitation. *MODHOOSOODUN DEY v. A plaintiff entitled as of right to light and air through a certain window, subsequently enlarged it, and on the light thereto being interfered with by the defendant, gave him notice to remove the obstruction two days after it had been completed. Held that he had been guilty of no delay in taking steps to prevent the obstruction, and that he was entitled to a mandatory injunction requiring the defendant to remove it. PROVABUTTY DAREE v. 40. Obstruction—

Substantial injury—Injunction—Damages—Acquiescence.—Any act by which the control of light and air are taken off the hands of the person entitled to them, or by which the access of light and air to the window of a dwelling-house is interfered with, is prima facie an injury of a serious character. Where the defendant, without leave or license, took possession of the plaintiff's window as completely as if he had blocked it up altogether, Held that no precedent warranted the substitution of damages for an injunction in such a case against the plaintiff's will. The defendant's building, which obstructed the access of light and air to the plaintiff's window, began in May, and the plaintiff instituted his suit in July. Held that, prima facie, the plaintiff was entitled to the removal of the obstruction, and that it was for the defendant to show that the right had been lost by acquiescence. NANDKISHOR BALGOVAN v. BHAGUBHAI PRANVALABHDAS

41. User—Adjoining

houses with party wall.—The plaintiff and defendant being owners of two adjoining houses, with a common party wall between them, the former placed a window frame in an aperture in an upward extension of his part of the wall which he had erected eight years before suit, and the latter thereupon raised the wall on her side so as to cut off the supply of light and air which the plaintiff used to receive before, and after the placing of the window-frame. Held that there had been no appropriation of the light and air by the plaintiff for the statutory period (twenty years) creating in him a right of easement, and entitling him to relief against the inconvenience sustained by him. SARUBAI v. RAPU NABHAR

42. Injunction—

Damages—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 54, cl. (c)—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 26—Mandatory injunction.—The plaintiff complained that the defendants intended to build so as to obstruct the passage of light and air through an ancient window in his house, and render a room therein unfit for use, and prayed for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from so building. It was proved that the wall intended to be built would so shut out the light and air as to render the room completely dark and unfit for use. The Subordinate Judge granted the injunction as prayed. The defendants appealed to the Joint Judge, who amended the lower Court's decree by ordering the removal of the injunction and directing, in its stead, a new window to be opened in the plaintiff's house to the east of the window in question. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court, Held, reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court, that the plaintiff had an absolute and indefeasible right to the easement he had acquired; and the only possible question was whether injunction or damages was the appropriate remedy under the circumstances of the particular case. Held also that, as the evidence established that, after defendant's wall was built, plaintiff's room would not remain substantially as useful to him as before, the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction. HOLLAND v. WORLEY, L. R., 26 Ch. D., 578, distinguished. The High Court also directed a mandatory injunction to issue to the defendants to remove the wall they had raised after the lower Appellate Court had passed the decree in their favour and pending the plaintiff's appeal to the High Court. KADARBHAI v. 43. New house erected on the site of old house.—The mere fact of a house having been taken down, or having fallen down, and a new house being erected on its site would not by itself be sufficient to extinguish any right to light and air which the owner of the house may possess. The question whether the right is or is not extinguished would depend on whether the new doors and windows are in the same position and are of the same dimensions as the old doors and windows; in other words, the question for consideration would be whether the easement claimed as appertaining to the newly constructed house imposes a different and a greater burden on the servient tenement. FOWLER v. 44. Obstruction of right to light and air—Suit for injunction or damages—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 54.—The plaintiff was the owner of a house in Jambulwadi Street in Bombay. The defendant owned a house to the east of it, and between the two houses was a gully three feet seven inches wide, the part of which next the defendant's house was a gutter. On the ground floor of the plaintiff's house were four windows, and on the first floor two windows, all looking out into the gully, and all of them ancient windows. The defendant's house originally was a little higher than the plaintiff's house, and consisted of a groundfloor, a first floor, and a loft. Shortly before suit, the defendant pulled down this house, and on the same site began to build a new four-storied house with a loft. The plaintiff sued for an injunction, alleging that this new house, which would be of much greater height than the old one, would completely block up his ancient windows and cause him material damage, there being no other window in his house on the side next the defendant. The defendant in his written statement denied that his new house would cause material damage to the plaintiff. He alleged that his old house, which was higher than the plaintiff's, had a projecting cornice, so that hardly any direct light came to the plaintiff's windows, which were almost, if not entirely, lighted by the light that came from each end of the gully. He further stated that his new house would have no cornice, and that he had widened the gully, so that light to the plaintiff's windows would not be appreciably diminished, but that, even if the passage had not been widened, there would have been little diminution of light. He also alleged that the plaintiff had other windows and sources of light than the said six windows. While denying all damage, the defendant, however, to avoid litigation and without prejudice, paid into Court Rs200, which, he said, was more than sufficient to compensate the plaintiff. After filing the suit, the plaintiff obtained a rule for an injunction at the date of which the walls of the defendant's house had been built up as far as the second floor. The rule was subsequently discharged, the defendant consenting that the cause should be argued at the hearing as if the new house was then in the same condition. The defendant, however, subsequently continued to build, and at the date of hearing it was practically complete. The lower Court (STARLING, J.) found that prior to the building of the new house direct light came to the plaintiff's windows to the extent at all events of 5 inches, and in addition to this a considerable amount of lateral light came to the windows over the defendant's roof. The Court held that, as the plaintiff had a right to this light by prescription, he was absolutely entitled to the whole of it; that the defendant had by his new building cut off all the direct light, and that practically all the light left to the plaintiff was reflected light, the amount of which depended on the condition in which the defendant might choose to keep the walls of his house. Under these circumstances, the lower Court, looking at the house as if it was still in the condition in which it was at the time the injunction was discharged, held that the plaintiff was entitled to a mandatory injunction, and directed the defendant to remove the upper portion of the house, which had been built since that time. On appeal,—Held that, although the plaintiff's light had been sensibly diminished by the defendant's new building, there had not been such a large, material, and substantial damage as to require interference by injunction, or that the plaintiff's room had been rendered unfit for the purpose for which it might reasonably be expected to be used. The Appeal Court therefore varied the decree of STARLING, J., and refused an injunction, but ordered the defendant to pay the plaintiff Rs500 as damages. GHANASHAM NILKANT NADKARNI v. s. 54.—A promise was made regarding the access of light and air, by the plaintiff's predecessor in title, to windows placed by him in the upper part of his house which was separated by a narrow space from a building opposite belonging then to the defendant's predecessor. This promise was that the owner of the house would make no objection to the blocking up of the windows in question when the owner of the building opposite should rebuild it and raise it to a higher elevation. The owner of the windows accepted this promise. After the lapse of twenty years, the defendant, having given notice that he would act on the agreement, proceeded to rebuild; and he raised his building higher than the old one, causing the obstruction of which the plaintiff now complained. The High Court (FARRAN, J.) in its Original Jurisdiction decided that the case was not one for an injunction, but for damages, and gave the plaintiff a decree for a sum as compensation. On appeal, the Appellate Bench of the High Court (PARSONS and STRACHY, JJ.) held that the plaintiff had made out no prescriptive right to light and air, and the cases of Dhanjibhoy v. Lisboa, I. L. R., 13 Bom., 252, and Ghanasham Nilkant Nadkarni v. Moroba Ramchandra Pai, I. L. R., 20 Bom., 704

Held, on appeal to the Privy Council, that there having been a continuing agreement between the parties within the meaning of expl. 1 of the Easement Act, 1882, the acquirement by the plaintiff of an easement by prescription had been prevented. From the agreement it was apparent that the enjoyment of light and air had not been granted as an easement. SULTAN NAWAZ JUNG v. RUSTOMJI NANABHOY BYRAMJI JIJIBHOY I. L. R., 24 Bom., 156 [I. only amount of light for a dwelling-house which can be claimed by prescription or by length of time (whether prior or subsequently to the Limitation Act of 1871) without an actual grant is such an amount as is reasonably necessary for the convenient and comfortable habitation of the house. Rule laid down in Bagram v. Khettranath Karformah, 3 B. L. R., O. C., 41, followed. The right of air is co-extensive with the right to light. To give a right of action, either prior or subsequently to the Limitation Act of 1871, in a case (where there is no express contract on the subject) for an interference with the access of air to dwelling-houses by building on adjoining land, the obstruction must be such as to cause what is technically called a nuisance to the house; in other words, to render the house unfit for the ordinary purposes of habitation or business. There is no such right as a right to the uninterrupted flow of south breeze as such. The "45 degree rule" is not a positive rule of law, but is a circumstance which the Court may take into consideration, and is especially valuable when the proof of the obstruction is not definite or satisfactory. *DELHI AND LONDON BANK v. 48. ———— Partition of a joint family house—Effect of partition by a consent decree where the decree does not reserve any right to the use of light and air—Implied grant of easement upon severance of tenement.—On partition of a family dwelling-house by a consent decree the plaintiff claimed a right to the passage of light and air necessary for the enjoyment of his share of the building in the way in which it was enjoyed at the time of the partition, though no such right was expressly reserved in the decree. The defence was that the principle of an implied grant of easement upon severance of the tenement should not be applied to the case, but that the rights of the parties should be determined solely with reference to the decree made in the partition suit. Held that the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience should be applied to the case, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the right claimed, even in the absence of any express provision in the decree reserving such right. Quare—Whether the principle of an implied grant of easement in severance of tenements would apply in a case where the partition was effected by a decree of the Court in a contested suit, and not by a consent of parties. *KADAMBINI DEBI v. (i) RIGHT OF WAY.

50. ———— Path across land—Implied grant—Modes of acquiring easements—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 26.—In a suit for an injunction to restrain the defendant from using a path on the plaintiff's land, it appeared that the land held by the plaintiff and defendant had originally belonged to one owner, and that the plaintiff and the defendant had obtained their respective tenements more than twenty years previously. The path had been admittedly made by the original owner, but the plaintiff contended that, when he purchased the land, he had closed the path. This the Munsif disbelieved, and refused the injunction. The District Judge, treating the case as if it fell under s. 26 of the Limitation Act, and being of opinion that the defendant had not proved twenty years' peaceable, open, and uninterrupted exercise of the right of way, gave the plaintiff a decree. Held that the mode of acquiring an easement provided by s. 26 of the Limitation Act is not the only way in which an easement may be acquired, but an easement may also be acquired by implied grant. In the present case the use of the path, might be absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the defendant's tenement, in which case there would be an easement of necessity; or the use of the path, though not absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the defendant's tenement, might be necessary for its enjoyment in the state in which it was at the time of severance; and in this case, if the easement were apparent and continuous, there would be a presumption that it passed with the defendant's tenement. *CHARU SURNOKAR v. 52. ———— Lane from public road to house—User—Limitation Act (XV of 1871), s. 27.—In a suit for declaration of the plaintiff's right of way over a lane leading from a public road to a door in the plaintiff's house, which lane the defendant, who resided at the end of the lane, had obstructed so as to prevent access to the plaintiff's house, it appeared that the house in respect of which the easement was claimed belonged in 1855 to one H C, during the time of whose occupation there was user of the right of way over the lane to the door, until he had the door bricked up. In April 1865 the house was sold by H C, and in June 1867 was conveyed by the purchaser to the plaintiff. From the blocking up of the door until the plaintiff's purchase no user was proved. The suit was brought in June 1876, about a month after the erection by the defendant of the obstruction complained of. Held, both in the Court below and on appeal, that the owner of the dominant tenement having, with the intention of preventing the use of the way, created an obstruction of a permanent nature which rendered such use impossible, the way could not be said, during the continuance of such obstruction, to have "been openly enjoyed" within the meaning of s. 27 of Act IX of 1871, and that accordingly, though there had been no interruption within the meaning of that section, a right to the way had not been established under the Act. *SHAM CHURN AUDDY v. 53. ——— Right of passage—Unity of possession—Severance—Nuisance arising from acts of several persons.—The words "appurtenant" or "belonging" will ordinarily carry only actual existing easement, and therefore will carry no right of way over the land of the grantor, though, under certain circumstances, even these words will have a wider construction. Where further words are used, such as "therewith held or used," such words will carry a way formerly enjoyed as an easement, but as to which the right has been suspended by unity of possession. But such words will not carry a way made by the owner of both properties during the unity of possession for his own greater convenience in the use of the two properties jointly. But where, during the unity of possession, a way, which has never existed as an easement, is in fact used for the convenience of one of the tenements afterwards severed, the authorities show that the words in question are large enough to carry it. One who has a right of passage over any place must not, any more than the owner of the soil might, use it in an excessive or improper manner so as to obstruct the exercise by others of their rights. The acts of several persons may together constitute a nuisance, though the damage occasioned by the acts of any one, if taken alone, would not be appreciable. *CHUNDER KOOMAR MOOKERJEE v. (J) RIGHT CONCERNING WATER.

60. ——— Right to flow of water—Obstruction to flow of water—Continual user.—The plaintiff brought a suit to establish his right to an uninterrupted flow of water through a channel which ran into a tank in a village which was the plaintiff's property, and to compel the removal of sluices erected across the said channel by the first defendant's predecessor in office, and used for the purpose of diverting the flow of the water. Held that acquiescence in the sense of mere submission to the interruption of the enjoyment does not destroy or impair an easement. To be effectual for that purpose, it must be attributable to an intention on the part of the owner to abandon the benefit before enjoyed. Held also that the diversion of the water was a continuing injury down to the time of the institution of the suit, and that the plaintiff's suit was not barred. Held also that it must appear from the circumstances in evidence in such case that the interference or obstruction complained of is not a trivial, but a substantial injury in order to warrant relief by way of injunction. Held also that the right to an easement in the flow of water through an artificial water-course is as valid against the Government as it is against a private owner of land. Held per SCOTLAND, C.J.—That the grant of an easement may be presumed from mere continued user of the privilege openly enjoyed by the occupiers of the dominant tenement as of right throughout any long period of time without interruption on the part of the proprietor of the servient tenement, but with this qualification, that the user should be for at least the period of adverse possession which is prescribed by s. 1, cl. 12, of the Act of Limitations, as a bar to the enforcing of title to corporeal property. Per INNES, J.—That no precise period of uninterrupted enjoyment can be fixed as sufficient of itself to establish a right to an easement. POKHUSAWMI TEVAR v. defined channel over the lands of others may exist independently of the provisions of s. 27 of the Limitation Act, 1871. When such a right is claimed as a hereditary and customary right and evidence is given in support of long user, such evidence may be sufficient to justify the Court in presuming a grant of the easement, and a Court is not justified in dismissing the suit on the ground that there had been no user by the plaintiff within two years prior to suit. SEENIVASA RAU SAKES (JAGIRDAR OF AEMI) v. 62. ——— Permission to erect dam—Grant—Relief against injury done by permissive act.—When a tenant by his lessor's permission erected a dam upon his holding, and thereby obstructed the natural flow of the water to other lands of the lessor, Held that the mere permission did not amount to a grant. Held also that there was no implied grant of the right to use water so as to derogate from the rights of those through whose lands the stream would otherwise flow. Held also that the right under the permission might be terminated by revocation of the latter, but that such revocation would only be permitted on the terms of the landlord paying to the tenant the expenses which that permission had led him to incur. Even when the dominant and servient tenements are the property of different persons, a man may license an act in its inception, and yet be entitled to relief when the act is found to have injurious consequences which he could not have contemplated at the time of the license. KESAVA PILLAI v. PEDDU REDDI

63. ——— Exclusive right to use of water.—The plaintiffs, as shareholders in, and heads of, the villages of Ariyur and Kuvirikudi, sued for an injunction directing the defendants to close an irrigation channel which was opened in 1869 and to remove the sluice. It appeared that a channel called Kaduvai had, by means of a branch, for very many years, supplied the plaintiff's village with water. The village of Partical, of which the first defendant was mirasidar, up to the date of the opening of the new channel, had received its supply from the Mallattar channel. The supply from this was insufficient, and the second defendant, the Superintending Engineer (representing Government), designed a new channel from the Kaduvai to supplement the deficiency of the Mallattar. The water of the Kaduvai was diverted into the new channel at a point above the point of divergence of the branch channel from the Kaduvai to the plaintiff's village. The relief was prayed for in the Court of first instance, on the ground that the supply by the Kaduvai had never been sufficient for the wants of the village, and that the new channel must necessarily cause a still further deficiency. The Civil Judge found that the plaintiffs had sustained no loss by the opening of the new channel, and dismissed the suit. On appeal it was contended, first, that plaintiffs had an absolute right to the uninterrupted flow of all the water in the Kaduvai channel without subtraction or diminution by the defendants or by the Government, represented by the second defendant, and that any diminution, though not causing loss, was an invasion of their rights; second, that if they had not such absolute right, they had a right to a supply of water for the necessary purposes of irrigation and otherwise for their village, and that the possibility of loss at some future time, arising from a possible wrongful diminution of the water to their detriment through the new sluice and channel, entitled them to the relief claimed. Upon the first point,—Held that the plaintiffs had not the extensive and exclusive right to the water contended for by them, but that their right was limited to the beneficial enjoyment of the water for the irrigation and other necessary purpose of their tenancies as heretofore enjoyed. Also that the Government, as proprietor of the Kaduvai channel and water in it, had, subject to the above limited use by the plaintiffs and other villages in the same position as the plaintiffs, a right to distribute the water of the Kaduvai channel for the benefit of the public. *Ponnasami Terar v. 64. ————— Suit to restrain interference with water rights—Damages—Right of Government to distribute water.—The plaintiffs, who were raiyats under the Government, brought a suit to restrain the defendants, the agents of the Government, and others, from so altering a calingula as to diminish the quantity of water which the plaintiffs were entitled to receive for the irrigation of their lands, and the plaintiffs alleged that the supply of water had been materially diminished by reason of the acts of the defendants. The only ground upon which the plaintiffs' claim was put was that they had received the water for a long time. The District Court held that the Government were authorized to regulate the distribution of water in such cases. Held, on regular appeal, per HOLLOWAY, J., that no legal right was shown by the plaintiffs which could have been violated by the defendants, and that, if such right were established, there was nothing to show that a decree for damages would not have been the proper remedy. Per INNES, J.—That the evidence did not show any diminution of the supply of water below the quantity to which the plaintiffs were entitled. VENKATA REDDY v. LISTER. 7 Mad., 342

65. ————— Interruption—Abandonment.—The plaintiff claimed a prescriptive right to the flow of the surface drainage water from the land of the defendant on to his land. Held that such an easement can be acquired only where the water flows in a definite channel. In a suit for interrupting the flow of water from the land of the defendant to the land of the plaintiff it appeared that eight years before suit, the defendant had diverted the water, and that it had been diverted ever since. Held that the right, if acquired, would not necessarily be lost by the interruption, but that, if the plaintiff acquiesced during that time in the interruption, it might be some evidence of an abandonment of the right. KENA MAHOMED v. BOHATOO SIRCAR

LUCHMER PERSHAD v. FUZEELUTOOWISSA BIRIE
[7 W.R., 367

66. ————— Right to passage of water—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), ss. 23 and 26—Continuing nuisance—Easement.—From time immemorial and certainly for more than twenty years prior to the date of the obstruction by the defendants, the plaintiff enjoyed the right of having an egress for his rain-water through a drain in the defendants' land. The plaintiff, more than two years after the date of the obstruction, sued the defendants for the removal of the obstruction. Held that though, under the circumstances, the plaintiff had failed to prove a title acquired under s. 26 of Act XV of 1877, yet the plaintiff, having a title evidenced by immemorial user, did not require the aid of that Act; and inasmuch as the obstruction complained of constituted a continuing nuisance, as to which the cause of action was renewed de die in diem, the plaintiff's claim was not barred by any provision of the Act, but, on the contrary, was saved by the express provision of s. 23. *PUNJA KUVARJI v. 67. ————— Easements apparent and continuous—Easements of necessity—Implied grant.—A and B were originally in joint possession of certain land. They divided this land in 1865, and, ten years later, built at their joint expense a partition wall between their respective portions, leaving a drain in the wall for the passage of water from A's to B's land. In 1885 B stopped the flow of water by this drain. A thereupon sued for an injunction to restrain B from causing the obstruction. The Court of first instance decreed the claim. The Appellate Court rejected the claim, on the ground that there was no express agreement between the parties that the water should be carried off by the drain in the wall. Held on second appeal to the High Court that A would be entitled to the easement claimed by him if he could show either that it was necessary for the enjoyment of his share of the property, or that it was apparent and continuous and necessary for enjoying the share as it was enjoyed when the partition took effect. *PURSHOTAM SAKHARAM v. 68. ————— Water in defined channel.—From time immemorial a certain "al" formed the boundary of two pieces of land belonging to the plaintiffs and the defendants respectively. The plaintiffs' land was on a higher level than that of the defendants, and from time immemorial the surplus water used to flow from the plaintiffs' land through certain passages in the "al" and across the defendants' land. The defendants closed up the passages and increased the height of the "al." Held that, if having been established that for a long series of years the waters from the plaintiffs' lands had been accustomed to escape in a particular direction and by certain separate passages across the defendants' land, the defendants could not do anything which would interfere with the plaintiff's rights in this respect. IMAM ALI v. PORSH MUNDUL

69. Right to use of water—Irrigation—License creating right of easement—Revocation of agreement to use water.—In a suit to establish a right of water and for damages for interruption of the same, the facts were as follow: Plaintiff and defendant by agreement between them constructed a dam across a main channel, and from thence a smaller channel was made through the land of the defendant to the plaintiff's land, by means of which it was agreed that the plaintiff should be at liberty to irrigate the fields. The agreement was acted upon for a long course of years. Held that the agreement was not a mere parol license revocable at the pleasure of the defendant, but an agreement which created a right of easement, unlimited in point of time to the use of the water by the plaintiff, and imposed upon the defendant the corresponding duty of allowing the accustomed supply to flow. A mere license differs in its effects from a license coupled with the creation of an interest. The former is revocable, but the latter is subject to the same incidents, and is as binding and irrevocable as any other contract, gift, or grant. KRISHNA v. RAYAPPA SHANBHAGA

70. Artificial water-course.—The right to water flowing to a man's land through an artificial water-course, constructed on a neighbour's land, must rest on some grant or arrangement, proved or presumed, from or with the owner of the land from which the water is artificially brought, or on some other legal origin. Such a right may be presumed from the time, manner, and circumstances under which the easement has been enjoyed. RAMESUR PHERRAD NARAIN SING v. KOONJ BEHARI PATUK

71. User—Artificial water-course.—In 1860 B, whom the plaintiff in this suit represented, agreed with Government for the lease of a plot of ground called the D estate and got possession. In 1865 B took a lease of the estate from Government for 999 years, to enure as a lease from 1860, the time at which he entered upon possession. The defendant's estate adjoined plaintiff's. Defendant's title, also derived from Government, dated from 1869. A formal lease was granted to his predecessor in 1874 in similar terms to that to plaintiff. In 1864 B opened an artificial channel for the conveyance of water for the use of his estate. This channel was taken off from a ravine in Government waste land, and before reaching the plaintiff's estate passed through land which in 1864 belonged to Government, but which subsequently formed portion of the defendant's estate. When the lease, under which the defendant claimed, was made in 1874, the flow of water through the channel was enjoyed by the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued to restrain the defendant from interfering with and diverting the flow of water in this channel and for damages. Held that the flow of water in the channel having existed as an apparent and continuous easement in fact at the time of the execution of the lease in 1865, a right to it passed by implication under that lease, and that the plaintiff was accordingly entitled to it; that the defendant, whose lease was subject to that right, was not entitled to interrupt the flow; but that he might use the water in a reasonable manner, as it flowed through his land. MORGAN v. KIBBEY

72. Obstructing water-course—Presumption of title founded on user—Limitation Act, 1871, s. 27, and art. 31—Continuing act of wrong.—More than twenty years, and possibly fifty or sixty, before suit, the plaintiff's ancestors and predecessors in estate had constructed and used a pain, or artificial water-course, on the defendants' land, making compensation to them. The pain, by a channel at one part of its course, contributed to the water in a tal, or reservoir, belonging to the defendants; and by a channel at another part took the water which overflowed from the tal, after the defendants had used as much of the water therein as they required. Less than twenty years before, the suit, the defendants, without authority, obstructed the flow of water along the pain in several places. The Courts below differed as to whether some of these obstructions had not been made more than two years before the suit, the rest having been made within that period. Held that the provisions of Act IX of 1871—a remedial Act, and neither prohibitory nor exhaustive—did not exclude, or interfere with, the acquirement of rights otherwise than under them. A title might be acquired under that Act by a person having no other right at all; but it did not exclude, or interfere with, other titles and modes of acquiring easements. And s. 27, by allowing a user of twenty years, if exercised until within two years of suit, under the conditions prescribed, to give, without more, a title, did not prevent proof of an easement founded on another title, independently of the Act. Such a long enjoyment as the plaintiff had proved should be referred to a legal origin, and the long user of the pain and of the superfluous water of the tal afforded evidence giving rise to a presumption that a grant, or an agreement, had been made creating an easement. Although, on the assumption that some of the obstructions in question had existed for more than two years before the suit, the plaintiff might not have shown a right under Act IX of 1871, s. 27, yet he did not require its aid. Held also that such obstructions being continuous acts, as to which the cause of action accrued de die in diem, Act IX of 1871, sch. II, part V, cl. 31, fixing two years from the date of the obstruction as the period of limitation "for obstructing a water-course," did not preclude a suit complaining of obstructions, though made more than two years preceding the date of the commencement of the suit. RAJEND KORE v. 73. ——— Right to discharge surplus water on another's land—Servitudes—Servient and dominant owners.—Where A has a right to discharge the surplus rainfall from his land on to the land of B, no length of time will give B a right to compel A to send the water on; provided that A does not interfere with any portion of the water which flows from his land to that of B in a natural and defined channel. The servient owner cannot prevent the dominant owner from putting an end to the servitude at any time he may think proper. KHOORSHED HOSSEIN v. TEKNARAIN SING

74. ——— Right to have water carried off over neighbour's land—How far it interferes with right of erecting buildings.—A right to have water carried away over the adjoining land does not give its owner any power to prevent the erection of buildings on the adjoining ground so long as the arrangements necessary to the preservation of his right are made. BALA v. [I. L. R., 20 Bom., 788]

75. ——— Right to use of water drain—Proof of enjoyment of easement for term sufficient to give right to it.—In a suit for the recovery of a right of easement in a drain that had been closed up, in which suit the Munsif found that a drain had existed which had recently been closed, and that there was no other way whereby water could escape from plaintiff's land, and accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree which was upheld by the Judge. Held that the real issue to be tried was whether the plaintiff had enjoyed the easement for the time (twenty years) and in the manner laid down in the law. RAMESHVAR MISSEK v. 76. ——— Right to divert flow of water—Presumption of grant—User.—A right to divert the flow of water into a particular channel by erecting a dam across a stream was held to be established in a suit brought in 1878 by proof of exercise of the right for eighteen years prior to 1871. ZAMINDAR OF HURUPAM v. 77. ——— Right to water of river—*Relative rights of riparian proprietors and occupiers to the water of river—Diversion—User—Rights of the Government—*Khalsa or raiyatvadi land.—A dam had been in existence across a river for upwards of 280 years, and during all that time the villages of D and P had received an equal supply of water from separate sluices in the dam. The Government authorities, being of opinion that D required less water than P, reduced the size of the D sluice, and consequently the amount of water flowing to the D village. The village of D was khalsa or raiyyatvadi, i.e., was held immediately of Government. The inhabitants of D appealed against the action of Government. Held that the Government had no such right of interference, neither (1) as riparian proprietors (supposing them to be such), since the right to the enjoyment of the water of a river belongs to the occupant of the river-bank, whatever the nature of his tenancy; nor (2) by any other imaginable rights existing in the Government as such, since, if any such rights ever existed, the long user for upwards of 280 years of the water from the dam by the village of D would be amply sufficient to justify a presumption of an original animus dedicandi in the Government. COLLECTOR OF NASIK v. 78. ——— Natural streams—Easement Act (V of 1882), ss. 6, 7, 17—Surface water—Rights of riparian owners.—The owners of a tank fed by natural streams which depended for their supply on natural rainfall and surface water sued for an injunction to restrain superior riparian owners from damming the streams or interfering with the supply of water, over which the plaintiffs claimed a right of easement. The issue as to the ownership of the land on which the streams rose was undecided. Held (1) The Easement Act only declared the existing law as to easements over water; (2) An easement can therefore be acquired in regard to the water of the rainfall. But surface water not flowing in a stream, and not permanently collected in a pool, tank, or otherwise, is not a subject of easement by prescription, though it may be the subject of an express grant or contract; (3) It is the natural right of every owner of land to collect or dispose of all water on the surface which does not pass in a defined channel; (4) Riparian owners are entitled to use and consume the water of the stream for drinking and household purposes, for watering their cattle, for irrigating their land, and for purposes of manufacture, subject to the conditions (i) that the use is reasonable, (ii) that it is required for their purposes as owners of the land, and (iii) that it does not destroy or render useless or materially diminish or affect the application of the water by inferior riparian owners in the exercise either of their natural right or their right of easement if any; (5) It was therefore necessary to ascertain where the streams rose, and the course, source, and length of their tributaries. PERUMAL v. 79. ——— Easement over a well—Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 2 (b)—Customary right to use the well.—No fixed period of enjoyment is laid down by law as necessary to establish a customary right, and a customary right to use a well may exist apart from a dominant heritage. PALANTANDI TEVAN v. 80. ——— Water-course—Riparian owners, Rights of—Mamlatdar, Jurisdiction of—Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 7.—The law as to riparian owners is the same in India as in England, and is stated in illustration (A) of s. 7 of the Easements Act (V of 1882). Each proprietor has a right to a reasonable use of the water as it passes his land, but, in the absence of some special custom, he has no right to dam it back, or exhaust it, so as to deprive other riparian owners of like use. What would constitute an unreasonable diversion of water such as to

81. ——— Right to throw back water on another's land—Right of other person to relieve himself from inconvenience.—The tank used for the irrigation of the plaintiff's village was supplied in part by rain-water falling on the lands of the village occupied by defendants 9 to 17, and the bund of the tank used formerly to throw back the waters so flowing into the tank on to the lands of defendants, where it remained till gradually drawn off into the area of the tank. Defendants 9 to 17, through the agency of the Government, relieved themselves of this inconvenience by making a work for draining off the water so periodically thrown back upon their land. A channel was also constructed for conducting a supply of water to the plaintiff's tank. Plaintiffs, however, claimed to have the former state of things restored, on the ground that they had a prescriptive right to throw back the water on to the defendant's lands and to keep it there till required for use. Held that there was here no object over which a right could be acquired. ROBINSON (COLLECTOR OF NORTH ARCOT) v. 83. ——— Suit for removal of wall.—In a suit for the removal of a wall on which plaintiff had been allowed by defendants for a number of years to rest the thatch of a hut, and which wall and thatch, after having been thrown down by a cyclone, had been rebuilt by plaintiff, though the thatched roof had been again blown down, and there was no thatch at the time of the suit.—Held that, under these circumstances, the plaintiff could not have acquired a prescriptive right that the water from the thatch should pass over defendant's lands, and was not entitled to restrain him building up the wall. LALL MONER DOSSEN v. 84. ——— Right to discharge water from roof on house of another—Limitation—User.—The plaintiff and the defendant were owners, respectively, of two adjoining houses, having a space between them belonging to the plaintiff. The plaintiff built a new storey to his house, with a roof overhanging the roof of the defendant's house, and under an alleged custom of the country (Ahmedabad) claimed a right to remove the part of the defendant's roof which projected over his (plaintiff's) land. He also sued to establish his right to an easement as against the defendant of compelling the defendant to receive upon the roof of his house the rain-water which flowed from the newly-erected roof of the plaintiff. Held, with regard to the former claim, that if the enjoyment by the defendant were considered as possession, by him, of the space occupied by his projecting roof, the Limitation Act extinguished the plaintiff's right to sue; and if such enjoyment were to be regarded as a mere easement, then the uninterrupted user of more than thirty years vested in the defendant a proprietary right to the same. Held further, with regard to the plaintiff's claim to an easement, that the plaintiff could only have acquired such easement either by contract or prescription, on neither of which did he rely. No custom can be admitted to override the provisions of the Limitation Act. MOHANLAL JECHAND v. AMRATLAL BROHERDAS

85. ——— Rights accessory to an easement—Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 24.—The plaintiff, having in a previous suit obtained a decree declaring his right of having the roof of his house projecting over the defendants' land and discharging water thereon, now sued for a declaration of his right to go upon the defendants' land for the purpose of repairing the roof. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to the right claimed as being accessory to the easement already established, but that it should be exercised only once a year, and after notice to the defendants. HAYAGREENVA v. 86. ——— Trees overhanging neighbour's land—Right to have branches of trees cut—Nuisance—Easement Act (V of 1882).—Plaintiff sued for an injunction restraining the defendant from allowing the branches of a tree belonging to him to overhang plaintiff's land, and for an order directing him to cut off the branches. Defendant pleaded that the branches of his tree had projected over plaintiff's land for forty years, and contended he had therefore acquired a prescriptive right of the nature of an easement over plaintiff's land. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to cut away the branches which overhang his land, though they had done so for more than forty years. HARI KRISHNA JOSHI v. ss. 20, 22, 23—Bank of Bombay—Registration and transfer of shares—Rights of surviving co-parceners—Necessity of probate or letters of administration.—Thirteen shares of the Bank of Bombay stood in the name of one Sarabhai, who died in March 1895. The plaintiff, who was the minor son of Sarabhai and joint and undivided with him, applied to the Bank to have the shares transferred to his name as the sole surviving co-parcener of Sarabhai. The Bank contended they were not bound to do so without production of the probate of the will of Sarabhai or letters of administration to his estate. Held (reversing RUSSELL, J.) that, having regard to the terms of the Presidency Banks Act (XI of 1876), the Bank were right in their contention. For a share in the Bank, for the purposes of devolution or survivorship, must be deemed, as far as the Bank was concerned, the exclusive property of its registered holder, and that therefore the sole surviving co-parcener of a deceased Hindu cannot demand that the Bank of Bombay should, by reason of his survivorship, register him as a shareholder in respect of shares in the Bank which stand in the name of his deceased co-parcener. BANK OF BOMBAY v. s. 408.—S. 370 of the Code of Criminal Procedure requires that in a case in which the accused is sentenced to imprisonment a Presidency Magistrate shall record a brief statement of the reasons for the conviction. It is not sufficient for him to record that the offence is proved, for that may necessarily be implied to be his opinion from the fact that he has convicted the accused. PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS ACT (XI OF 1890).

— ss. 2 and 3—Crabs—Animals—Cruelty to animals.—The provisions of Act XI of 1890 apply to cruelty exercised towards any animal which is either "domestic" or which being feræ naturæ has been "captured" and is in captivity. Crabs are "animals" within the definition of s. 2 of Act XI of 1890. If a person exposes them for sale at a public place with their legs broken and with their shells crushed in so as necessarily to cause them pain, he incurs the penalty prescribed by s. 3 of the Act. *TULSI BEWAH v. 2. ———— Effect of act done without authority—Signing document by unauthorized agent.—The signature by an agent of a wajib-ul-uruz from which the record of an important interest in property was omitted cannot be considered as a waiver of the right or claim unless he was properly authorized to sign it. IMAMBUNDEE v. BHUGWAN-DASS . 1 N. W., 41: Ed. 1873, 38

3. ———— Suit against agent for account—Payments or advances to third parties—Proof of authority of agent.—As a general rule, an agent or collector cannot discharge himself of moneys for which he is liable to account, by proving payments or advances to third parties, unless he can show that such payments or advances were made by the express authority of the principal, or with his knowledge and consent. FAGAN v. CHUNDER KANT BANERJEE . 7 W. R., 452

4. ———— Implied authority of agent—Liability of Principal.—When a person takes advantage of the management of his affairs by another, he must fulfil the engagements which that other has contracted in his name, provided such engagement be within the proper limits of the manager's authority, and be for the benefit of the estate. KOORA v. ROBINSON . 2 Agra, Mis., 2

5. ———— Holding out, by the principal, of the agent's authority.—The right of a third party against the principal on the contract of his agent, though made in excess of the agent's actual authority, was nevertheless enforced where the evidence showed that the contracting party had been led into an honest belief in the existence of the authority to the extent apparent to him. RAM PHETAB v. MARSHALL . I. L. R., 26 Calc., 701
[3 C. W. N., 313]

6. ———— Evidence of authority—Policy of insurance.—To prove the authority of an agent who underwrites a policy of insurance, it is not necessary, in order to charge his principal, that the instrument appointing such agent should be produced, if it is shown that he has been in the habit of underwriting policies for his principal, and that the latter has been in the habit of paying losses upon policies so subscribed. MULCHAND CHUTUMAL v. SUNDARJI NARANJI . 7 Bom., O. C., 39

7. ———— General or special power of agent—Evidence of agency.—Where the evidence goes to show that a particular person said to be the agent of the defendant was really his general agent, and did transact business of various kinds for his principal, it is unnecessary to prove any special power enabling him to enter into a particular contract of bargain and sale. Per MAOPHERRSON, J.—The extent and nature of the powers vested in an agent are not so much matter of law as matter of fact. If it be proved that a person acted ordinarily as an agent for the defendant in buying and selling articles of merchandise, the fact of his not being proved to have previously purchased a particular kind of article would not necessarily operate against the plaintiff's case. The Court, in deciding the question of agency, must look to the general evidence on the record. RAM BAKS LAL v. KISHORI MOHAN SHAHA

[3 B. L. R., A. C., 273; 12 W. R., 130]

8. — Factors, Shipments by — Consignees — Custom of Calcutta. — Factors having an interest, by reason of their advances in their principal's goods, are justified in shipping those goods for sale, either "on account of those concerned," or "on account of themselves," unless their general authority was controlled by instructions from their principal or by contract. The evidence failing to show that any particular usage or custom qualifying the law of England as between principal and factor prevails in Calcutta. Held that the powers and duties of the factors in making consignments of their principal's goods must be determined by the general mercantile law. Factors entrusted with possession of their principal's goods, and having advanced upon them, shipped the goods to London, drawing bills against them in their own names, and selling the bills with the shipping documents in the market. The acceptance of the factors' bills by the consignees, and the delivery of the shipping documents to them, made them the pledgees, but did not alter the character of the transaction, which was one whereby the factors had pledged the goods for the payment of bills on which they (and not the principal) were liable as drawers for an amount exceeding the value of the goods. In such a case no privity exists between the consignees and the undisclosed principal. Held therefore that, a loss having occurred on the shipments, the principal was liable to the factors' estate for the full amount of re-drafts representing that loss, although the factors had become insolvents, and had in fact paid only a small dividend on the re-drafts. MIRTUNJOY CHUCKERBUTTY v. COCHRANE

9. — Pledge by agent without authority — Stat. 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39, ss. 1 and 8 — Factors Act (XX of 1844) — Notice of agents' mala fides. — Where an agent entrusted with a document of title to goods pledged it mala fide, or without authority, it was necessary, in order to deprive the transaction of the protection given by the 1st section of the 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39, and to bring it within the proviso of the 3rd section, that the jury should find categorically that the lender had notice of the agent's mala fides or want of authority. To prove such notice, it was sufficient to show that the circumstances attending the transaction were such as that a reasonable man, and a man of business, applying his understanding to them, would certainly infer that the agent had not authority to make the pledge or that he was acting mala fide in respect thereof

10. — Banian — Del credere agent — Dealings between a Native and European firm. — G S & Co. employed R to make purchases for them in the bazar, upon orders which were in force for two days, and they imposed restrictions on R's authority to pledge their credit, which were not made known to those with whom he dealt. His remuneration was to be certain dustoree on the purchases, and he paid and gave receipts for the jute, as agents for G S & Co. He furnished accounts specifying the price of the goods and the expenses incurred by him upon them, and upon being paid he affixed his receipts to them. The purchases were unusually large, and in R's books G S & Co. were debited with the amount paid for the goods, R retaining no interest in, or profit out of, it. J S, one of the vendors to R, sued G S & Co. for the price of some of the goods so purchased by R. Held that a general authority implies all powers necessary, or usual, or proper, as means to effectuate the purposes for which it was created. A banian is a del credere agent with regard to his employer in making purchases, and is a principal with reference to third persons. Held also that a person who has been allowed to represent himself as agent of a merchant under a general authority is not as such a banian; that when a native dealer makes purchases for a European house, the presumption is that the vendor gave credit to the native dealer; and that goods having been purchased for an employer and entered to his debit, and receipts given for them in his name, raises no presumption that the buyer was a banian. GRANT, SMITH & Co. v. 11. — Agent exceeding authority — Variation in time for delivery. — Where a principal instructed his agent to enter into a contract for the delivery of cotton at the end of Kartik, but the agent entered into a contract for the delivery thereof by the middle of that month, it was held that the agent exceeded his authority in such a manner as to exempt the principal from liability upon the contract. Though the objection assigned by a principal for repudiating a contract at the time of such repudiation be unfounded, he is not precluded from subsequently availing himself of other valid objections. ARLAPA NAYAK v. 12. — Taking advances. — A native lady, possessing an estate in a district in which she did not reside, opened an account with a banker, through her son, as agent, to provide for the punctual payment of Government revenue, and to meet current expenses. Held that such a

13. ——— General agent, Power of—Universal agents.—A general agent has not ordinarily powers co-extensive with those possessed by a universal agent. 22. ——— Suit for goods sold and delivered to wife after separation.—It is not necessary that knowledge of a separation between husband and wife should be brought home to the plaintiff in an action for goods sold and delivered to the wife after separation where plaintiff has long dealt with the wife as the husband's agent. *SHAM CHUND DOSS v. 23. ——— Right of agent to sue—Suit by wife's constituted attorney—Lunatic—Act XXXV of 1858.—D sued in the Mamlatdar's Court, as A's constituted attorney, for an injunction restraining the defendants from causing any obstruction to his possession of certain lands. The land belonged to A's husband, who was alleged to be a lunatic, but there was no adjudication of his lunacy, nor was A appointed a manager of his estate under Act XXXV of 1858. Held that D had no right to sue. A, not having been appointed a manager of her husband's estate, had herself no right to sue in respect of a disturbance of her husband's possession. She could not therefore authorize her agent to sue on her behalf. NEMAYA v. DEVANDRAPPA [I. L. R., 15 Bom., 177

24. ——— Gomashta, Power of—Contract through broker.—N sued J S & Co. for damages occasioned by the inferiority of certain goods, which he alleged that he bought of them on a verbal contract made by his gomashta M through his broker F. The defendants' case was that the contract was a written one, and contained a stipulation exempting them from liability on certain conditions which had not been complied with, and was made by K, one of the plaintiffs' gomashtas, by the pen of J, one of their brokers, whom R had authorized to sign the contract. The Court below found that K was N's gomashta, but could not as such depute a third party to sign a contract for N, and judgment was given for the plaintiffs. On appeal,—Held that a gomashta has a general authority to manage his employer's business, not as a mere agent, but with power to do all acts necessary for carrying it on, and to authorize brokers to make contracts. A broker authorized to sign a particular contract is not authorized to sign it if it contain a stipulation unknown to his employer, and vice versa. JARDINE, SKINNER & Co. v. NATHORAM. Bourke, A. 27. ———— Authority to sue on behalf of principal.—In a suit, under Act X of 1859, where plaintiff sues as a gomashtha of the zamindar, it is not necessary that a power-of-attorney or any other formal document conferring a special power on the plaintiff should be produced, if it is proved from the evidence that he filled that character. MADHO SINGH v. 35. ———— Agent of owner of estate—Lease by agent—Fraud and collusion—Ratification.—In a suit to set aside a lease as granted without authority by an agent to the defendant, who was the naib of the estate, and as procured by fraud by the defendant in collusion with the agent, the latter charge of collusion having been withdrawn at the hearing before the Subordinate Judge, the High Court remarked on the impropriety of presenting a plaint charging collusion between the agent and defendant without good grounds for such imputation, and on the withdrawal of such charge at the hearing if there were grounds for it; and agreed with the Subordinate Judge in thinking that the owner of the estate in issue must be presumed to know what was being done on her behalf by her agent. The presumption is that a man acts rightly and not fraudulently. The mere circumstance that the rents were low does not give rise to the presumption that there had been fraudulent conduct on the part of the naib, or that he did not state the circumstance to the agent before obtaining the lease from him. There is also this difference between this case and other cases in which contracts between principals and agents are sought to be set aside on the ground of good faith, that here another agent is interposed, and it is not the case of the defendant (the naib) making a report to the owner in England. Even supposing the original transaction liable to be set aside, the ratification by a person having authority from the owner to make inquiries and ratify what had been done would render it invalid. ANUND CHUNDER BOSE v. 38. — Headman of village—Acts of, to bind co-sharers.—Held that to make the acts of the headmen of a village in boundary disputes and other matters binding on the co-sharers it is not necessary that there should be specific authority by power-of-attorney or otherwise, or subsequent express or implicit assent or sanction in absence thereof. Requisite authority may be inferred from the facts of each case by showing that the headman of the village have usually in similar disputes been permitted to act and represent for the other sharers. Held also that agency in every case can only be created by the will of the principal, and his will may be manifested in writing or orally, or simply by placing another in a position so as to be understood according to ordinary rules and usages to represent and act for one who has placed him. GUNGAPERSHAD v. 39. — Agent in survey of land Thakbust map—Act of agent—Endorsement—Evidence.—In a suit for possession of certain lands, for rectification of a thakbust map, and reversal of an Act X decision, the plaintiffs obtained a decree in the Court of first instance, the lower Appellate Court, and subsequently in the High Court on appeal. It appeared that the lower Courts had before them an incorrect copy of the thakbust map, the original forming part of the record of another suit. The High Court on appeal refused to send for this map, but subsequently, on review, it was sent for. There was an endorsement on the back, which did not appear on the copies originally before the Court, to the effect that the lands in dispute were pointed out by one T C acting as agent for the plaintiffs, to be measured as belonging to the defendant's talukh. Held the case must be remanded to the lower Appellate Court to determine (1) whether T C was the agent of the plaintiff; (2) whether, acting within the scope of his authority as such agent, he did sign the map as a correct map and pointed out the lands as belonging to the defendant; (3) and if so, how far these acts of the agent were binding on the plaintiffs. SUDAKHINA CHOWDHRAIN v. 41. — Power-of-attorney—Option of agent to accept service of summons.—A person holding a power-of-attorney, even if authorized by the power to appear and defend suits on behalf of his principal, is at liberty to refuse to accept service of summons and appear in a suit brought against his principal, but may either act upon the power or not, as he may think proper. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF LUOHMER CHUND

42. — Power to carry on suits—Assent to be bound by witness.—An agent's assent to be bound by the statement of a particular witness is not an assent to arbitration, but is an act entirely within the scope of his general authority as agent to carry on his principal's suits, and to do all acts necessary to that end. RAJENDER CHUNDER NEWGER v. 44. — Mooktear appointed by several co-sharers—Authority of agent—Evidence of general authority.—Where a general mooktear empowered to act on behalf of co-sharers does formal acts to enforce the rights of his principals (the zamindars), it is not necessary to trace back his authority in each case to the explicit sanction of every single member of the family. Mooktears must be considered to have a certain discretion, and,

45. ——— Authority to sign deed of sale—Proof of authority of agent.—Where a man resists liability for a deed of sale executed by his am-mooktear, it is necessary for the purchaser claiming under that deed to show that the mooktear had authority either by virtue of a general or special power-of-attorney to execute that deed and to bind his principal by executing that deed. MOHAN KOOR v. AJODHYA DOSS

[20 W. R., 119]

46. ——— Pardanashin woman—Account stated.—A mooktearnama executed by a pardanashin woman appointed her husband to be her general mooktear, and declared that "all acts done by the said mooktear, such as giving and taking loans to and from others, executing on my behalf, getting executed in my favour, deeds of absolute sale," and so on, "shall be accepted by me." It was sought to render the principal liable, on an account stated by her husband as her mooktear so empowered, for a debt, without proof that the money constituting it had been borrowed on her account. Held, on the construction of the mooktearnama, that the mooktear had no authority to bind her by such a statement of account, whatever authority he might have had to bind her by an actual borrowing of money on her behalf. No implication of authority in the mooktear to bind the woman by his stated account had arisen from the carrying on of a course of business. Accordingly, when the evidence of express authority failed, the statement of account by the mooktear was insufficient to render the principal liable. No evidence was given of the items lent, so as to establish an indebtedness independently of the account stated. SUDISHT LALL v. SHEORABAT KOER

48. ——— Partner of firm—Knowledge of person dealing with partner—Contract incapable of division.—A firm of carriers authorized one of their partners to draw bills on the firm to the extent of Rs200 each. The partner, acting in excess of his authority, and without the knowledge of the firm, made two promissory notes, in the name of the firm, for Rs1,000 each. The plaintiff knew the partner was limited to a particular sum, but also knew that two of his bills for Rs200 each had been previously accepted by the firm. In an action on the notes,—Held, first, that the firm was not liable for the whole amount drawn; and, secondly, that the contract, whereon the action was founded, was not capable of division, and therefore the firm was not liable to the extent of Rs200. PREMABHAI HEMABHAI v. BROWN [10 Bom., 319]

49. ——— Partnership in tea garden—Liability of partner for acts of managing partner—Authority of agent.—By an agreement made on 22nd July 1862 between C and T (since deceased) and the defendants P and S, C agreed to sell, and T, P, and S to purchase, a half share in the lands, plantation and estate belonging to C, known as the Laojan Tea Estates and Grants. The agreement provided that C was to conduct and manage all matters and affairs of the estates, but nothing was said as to its being done in his own name or in that of the partners of any firm. Money to carry on the business was provided by means of bills drawn by the local manager upon C in the same manner as if he (C) had been the sole owner, the defendants being fully aware of this and finding the funds. This mode of dealing continued down to the time of the transaction, which is the subject of this suit. The only act in the way of notice to the public on the part of the defendants was a notification in a directory published by them in Calcutta (T, S & Co. being booksellers and publishers), in which in the list of tea estates the Laojan concern was mentioned, and C, T, P, and S named as proprietors. In the directory for 1870 and 1872 C was also described as Calcutta agent. This suit was brought to recover a balance due in respect of moneys alleged to have been advanced by the plaintiffs on the tea to be manufactured in the season 1872, the plaintiffs being tea brokers who made the advances on the security of tea invoices and bills of lading. The terms on which the required advances were to be made were arranged by an agreement, dated 9th February 1872, between C and the plaintiffs, who were under the belief that C was the proprietor of the Laojan concern and not merely manager. By reason of C's death and the non-delivery of a portion of the season's tea, the plaintiffs were unable to reimburse themselves for their later advances, and brought the present suit against the defendants, who, they contended, were bound by all C's acts and dealings. Held by COUCH, C.J., that, assuming that the plaintiffs knew what was in the directory, it could not be considered as a notice to them that the authority which C had been exercising, and which he continued to exercise with, so far as it related to bills and drafts drawn by the local manager, the knowledge of his partners, the defendants, had been determined, and that he had only the authority of an ordinary Calcutta agent. Held also that the question in the case was whether the transaction between C and the plaintiffs was within the scope of the authority which C had, or was allowed by his partners to appear to have, in managing and conducting the affairs and business of the partnership. It was a question of actual or apparent authority, and whether the transaction was one which the owner of a tea garden carrying on the cultivation of it would in the ordinary course of business enter into. Held further that the transaction would have been according to usage if C had been the sole owner of the gardens, and the defendants, by allowing him to manage ostensibly as sole owner, clothed him with every authority incidental to a sole owner in that business. The defendants were therefore bound by the agreement of the 9th February 1872. SPINK v. MORAN

51. ——— Managing agent—Liability of principal—Banker and customer—Bills of exchange—Indorser and acceptor.—N & Co., the managing agents of the Barea Tea Company, had a general banking account with the Oriental Bank Corporation, which account they were allowed to overdraw on having the overdraft properly secured. Under the articles of association of the Barea Tea Company, N & Co. had power to "draw, accept, indorse, and negotiate on behalf of the company all such cheques, promissory notes, drafts, etc., as should be necessary for enabling them to carry on the business of the company." Purporting to act under this power, N & Co. drew a bill of exchange on the managing agents of the company, which was accepted by the latter, and indorsed by N & Co. to the Oriental Bank Corporation, who credited the amount to N & Co.'s general account. The amount was drawn out by cheques drawn by N & Co. personally without reference to the Barea Tea Company, and there was no proof that the money had been applied for the purposes of the Barea Tea Company. Held, in an action by the Oriental Bank against the Barea Tea Company, that the latter were not liable on the bills as acceptors. *ORIENTAL BANK CORPORATION v. 53. ——— Agent acting out of scope of authority—Liability of principal.—Held that an agent who is appointed for the general management and conduct of business cannot bind his principal by an unusual contract, not strictly relating to the conduct of the business, unless he has express or implied authority for the same. The fact that a consignor dealt in good faith with the agent, who exceeded his authority, is not sufficient to bind the principal. The consignor dealing with the agent ought to satisfy himself of the agent's authority. The defendant, not having ratified his agent's act by receiving the benefit of the contract, cannot be bound by the acts of his agent and liable to make good the losses. *MUDAREE LALL v. 54. ——— Payment to agent in belief he was principal—Liability of purchaser.—Where a party purchased cotton from a person both banker and broker, upon the just belief authorized by the facts that he (the seller to him) was the principal and not merely a broker, and paid him in good faith the price of the article purchased, he cannot be held liable to the real principal's claim, such payment protecting him from further liability. PETUMBER BHUGUTT v. MUTHOOBA DASS 1 Agra, 121

55. ——— Suit brought by agent for principal—Dismissal of suit brought by agent in his principal's name—Amendment of plaint—Court, power of.—A Court in which a suit is brought on behalf of one person, through the agency of another, is entitled to inquire as to the agent's authority. A suit for arrears of rent was brought by an agent, professing to act under authority from his principal. The plaintiff, after instituting the suit in his own name as agent, obtained an order from the Court granting him leave to amend the plaint by substituting the name of his principal as plaintiff, suing through him, an amendment which the defendant resisted disputing the authority of the agent. Held that the Court in allowing it did not decide that the agent had authority: that remained to be proved; and as it was not proved, the suit failed. *NAM NARAIN SINGH v. 57. ——— Promise to redeem mortgage—Consideration—Contract made by agent on his own behalf.—The plaintiff sued the defendant on mortgages executed to the plaintiff by the adoptive mothers of the defendant (who were also defendants) subsequently to his adoption. The plaintiff contended that the mortgages had become effectual as against the defendant by reason of his subsequent conduct. Evidence was given that he had promised his adoptive mothers to redeem the mortgages, and that he had stood by and allowed the plaintiff to carry out the provisions of the mortgage-deeds to his own detriment by paying maintenance to the defendant's adoptive mothers, and by paying off certain mortgages which had been created by them previously to the adoption of the defendant. Held that the defendant was not liable upon the mortgages. His promise to redeem the mortgages was not made to the plaintiff, but to his adoptive mothers, and there was no consideration for such promise as he made. Nor could the promise have the effect of ratification, for the ratification of the authorized contract of an agent can only be effectual when the contract has been made by the agent

59. — Acquiescence by mortgagor — Condition in wajib-ul-uruz — Execution of wajib-ul-uruz as mortgage.—Held that the original proprietors were not bound by a condition in the wajib-ul-uruz which had been signed and attested by a third party then in possession, not as authorized agent on behalf of the proprietors, but as a mortgagee. Subsequent acquiescence by the mortgagor or his representative might be only an acquiescence in the mortgagee's act to the extent and in the qualified way in which his consent was given. BEAGERUTH v. 3. REVOCATION.

60. — Agency of manager — Revocation by one of several shareholders.—A principal can determine the authority given to an agent. The authority given to a manager may be revoked by a shareholder, and another shareholder cannot resist such revocation, unless there has been a stipulation in the deed providing for the appointment of a manager that the authority should continue for some definite time. BULAKKE LALL v. 61. — Agent to sell property — Agreement — Remuneration for work and labour done.—The defendant requested the plaintiff to sell for him a plot of ground on the Esplanade in Bombay at any rate exceeding the price at which the defendant himself had purchased it, and agreed to give him as remuneration half of the net profit realized on the sale. The defendant subsequently revoked this authority, and the plaintiff shortly afterwards found a purchaser, whose offer the defendant did not accept. Held that the plaintiff could not recover on the agreement, which had not been performed on his part; that there was no ground for holding that the plaintiff and the defendant were partners in the transaction as between themselves; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover for work done as broker, or for commission, the nature of the agreement being that

62. — Hereditary agency — Contract — Consideration — Specific performance — Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 202, 203.—The defendant, by an agreement in the nature of a letter of attorney, constituted the plaintiff and his descendants the hereditary agents of the defendant, gave him authority to collect the rents of his share in an inam village, and promised to pay him an annual salary out of the rents. Held that, as between the parties and during their lifetime, the appointment was valid and binding, whether or not any valuable consideration passed, the mere acceptance of the office by the plaintiff being a sufficient consideration for the appointment. But, independently of the terms of the agreement, and whether or not the agency had been created for valuable consideration, the defendant had, under the general provisions of s. 203 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), a right to revoke the authority, as the mere arrangement that the plaintiff's salary should be paid out of the rents could not be regarded as giving to the plaintiff an interest in the property, the subject-matter of the agency, within the meaning of s. 202. If the defendant had revoked the agency improperly, the remedy lay, under ordinary circumstances, in a suit by the plaintiff for damages for breach of contract. Where, however, the plaintiff chose to sue for specific performance, and demanded arrears of salary.—Held that, without a valuable consideration for the defendant's promise, the agreement passed by him to the plaintiff would be nudum pactum, and the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover, except for work and services actually rendered. VISHNUCHARYA v. RAMOHANDRA

63. — Revocation of authority — Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 201, 202, 203 — Agent — Interest of agent in property — Exercise of authority so as to bind principal.—The plaintiff received instructions by letter from the defendants to purchase cotton on their behalf. This letter was received by the plaintiff before a telegram sent by the defendants the next day revoking the order reached him. The plaintiff replied by letter stating that the telegram had arrived too late, and that the purchase had already been made. In fact, the plaintiff had merely appropriated to the defendants a contract entered into by himself with a third party the day before the defendants' order reached him. Held that the telegram was a revocation of the order contained in the letter of the previous day. Held further that the plaintiff had no such interest in the subject-matter of the agency as to prevent its termination; nor had he exercised his authority so as to bind his principal, no contractual relation with any third person having been created before the receipt of the telegram. LAKSHMI-CHAND RAMOHAND v. 70. — Right of person dealing with agent personally liable—Suit and judgment recovered against agent—Subsequent suit against agent barred—Act IX of 1872 (Contract Act), s. 233.—The obligee under a hypothecation-bond brought a suit thereon against one who, upon the face of the instrument, contracted as obligor, but whom, when the suit was instituted, the plaintiff knew to have acted as agent in the transaction for a third person. Having obtained a decree, he satisfied it in part by attachment of a sum of money, and next caused the hypothecated property to be sold, and purchased it himself. Upon attempting to obtain possession, he was successfully resisted by the principal debtor under the hypothecation-bond, on the ground that the latter was the real owner of the property, and that the decree-holder had derived no title thereto from his judgment-debtor. He then sued the principal debtor to recover the balance remaining due upon the bond, after giving credit for the amount recovered by attachment in the suit against the agent. Held that the plaintiff, having elected to hold the agent responsible upon the contract, and having obtained judgment and decree against him and written up full satisfaction of the decree, could not afterwards maintain a suit against the principal in respect of the same subject-matter. *Priestly v. 71. — Carriage of goods by railway—Goods passing over the lines of several companies—Agreement for interchange of traffic—Loss of goods—Liability.—The plaintiff delivered to the Madras Railway Company a bale of cloth for carriage from B, a station belonging to that company, to S, a station belonging to the defendants, the G. I. P. Railway Company, and obtained from the Madras Company a receipt which recited that it was granted, "subject to the rules and regulations and charges in force on that or any other railway over which the goods might pass." The goods were lost while on the line and in the charge of the defendants, the G. I. P. Railway Company, and the plaintiff sued them for damages for breach of the contract of carriage. Between the two railway companies there existed an agreement arranging for the interchange of traffic, which provided, inter alia, that goods should be booked through to and from all stations on both lines at certain stated rates; that in such cases one company should receive payment and should account to the other; that any claim for loss or damage should be paid by the company in whose custody the goods were when lost or damaged, or if that could not be ascertained, then by both companies rateably; and that no alteration affecting the through traffic should be made by either company without previous notice to the other. The defendants pleaded that the suit was wrongly brought against them, as there was no contract between themselves and the plaintiff. Held that the suit, whether or not it might also have been brought against the Madras Railway Company, was rightly brought against the defendants, inasmuch as the agreement between the two companies, if it did not actually constitute a partnership between them, showed at least that the Madras Railway Company became the agents of the defendants to make the contract for carriage with the plaintiffs. *G. 72. ——— Undisclosed principal —

Settlement of accounts between principal and agent — Right of unpaid vendor — Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 231, 232.—The defendant, who resided in Dholera, employed the firm of S K as his agents in Bombay. A running account was kept, in which the defendant was debited with the price of goods purchased on his account by S K, and was credited with the price of goods sold by S K on his account, and with the amount of the remittances which he made from time to time. In fulfilment of orders received from the defendant on 16th March 1879, S K, on the 23rd March 1879, bought from the plaintiff 20,000 cocoanuts (out of a cargo of 42,000 then lately arrived at Bombay); on the 24th March 1879, 10,160 cocoanuts (out of a cargo of 23,000); and on the 27th March, 26,626 cocoanuts (out of a cargo of 71,250). By each of these three contracts it was agreed that the purchase money should be paid on delivery. At the time of making these contracts the plaintiff did not know, nor had he any reason to suspect, that S K was an agent, and not principal, in the transactions. On the 27th and 28th March 1879 the 30,160 cocoanuts (the subject-matter of the first two contracts) were transhipped into the vessel Lakshmiprasad, and on the 29th March 1879, the 26,626 cocoanuts (the subject-matter of the third contract) were transhipped into the vessel Lalsari for conveyance to Dholera. The Lalsari sailed from Bombay on the 31st March, and on her arrival at Dholera the defendant obtained possession of the third lot of 26,626 cocoanuts which had been shipped on board. On the 1st April S K received from the defendant remittances sufficient to pay for all the cocoanuts, and to leave a balance of Rs. 1,727 to the credit of the defendant in his account with S K. These remittances were made by the defendant in good faith, and were received by S K at a time when the plaintiff gave credit to S K, and did not know of any one else to be charged with the price of the cocoanuts. On the 2nd April the firm of S K stopped payment, and on the 8th April 1879 the plaintiff, in consequence of the failure of S K and the non-payment of the price of the

cocoanuts, transhipped the 30,160 cocoanuts (the subject of the first two contracts) from the Lakshmiprasad into the Ramprasad. These cocoanuts were subsequently sold, and the proceeds of the sale deposited in the Bank of Bombay to abide the result of this suit. On the 4th April the plaintiff discovered that the defendant was the principal in the coconut transaction, and brought this suit against him to recover the price of the three lots of cocoanuts. The defendant denied that S K had authority to pledge his (defendant's) credit in making purchases, and contended that, having in good faith paid his agent S K for the cocoanuts prior to the institution of the suit, he (the defendant) was not liable to the plaintiff. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. The rule of English law, which makes the liability of an undisclosed principal subject to the qualification that he has not bona fide paid the agent, or that the state of accounts has not been altered, is not adopted in the Contract Act. S. 232 is to be read as a qualification of the first portion of paragraph 1 of s. 231, which gives a principal a general right to enforce a contract entered into by his agent. S. 232 qualifies that general right by making it subject to the rights and obligations subsisting between the agent and the other contracting party. The 2nd clause of paragraph 1 of s. 231 gives a party contracting with an agent the same rights against the principal only as he would have had against the agent; and s. 234 adds a further qualification to his rights as against the principal. S. 232 of the Contract Act adopts the qualification imposed by English law upon the right of the principal to enforce a contract, viz., that he must take the contract subject to all the equities, in the same way as if the agent were the real principal; but it does not impose upon the right of the other contracting party the qualification laid down by the cases of Thompson v. Davenport, 2 Smith's L. C., 7th Ed., 364, and Armstrong v. Stokes, L. R., 7 Q. B., 598, namely, that the principal has not paid the agent, or that the state of the account between the principal and agent has not been altered to the prejudice of the principal. The only qualification to the right of the other contracting party against the principal is that imposed by s. 234, namely, that he has not induced the principal to act upon the belief that the agent only will be held liable. PREMI TRIKANDAS v. MADHAWJI MUNJI. [L. L. R., 4 Bom., 447

78. ———— Bankruptcy of agent, Effect of—Breach of contract—Damages—Amendment of bill of complaint.—This was a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage for Rs50,000 during a certain contract which, the plaintiffs contended, had determined by the bankruptcy of their Calcutta agents. The defence was that the contract was not so determined; and that, even if it were, the defendant had a right of lien or set-off, which would cover the amount of the advances. This set-off consisted of the amount of loss in the sale of silk, which the defendants, after the said bankruptcy, had shipped direct to London, and sold there on non-acceptance by the plaintiffs; and of a claim of Rs18,024, the amount of a bill of the said agents which the defendant had accepted from them as payment for silk, but which bill was dishonoured after the said bankruptcy. Cl. 6 of the agreement was as follows: "The silk to be paid for on delivery. Delivery to be taken within ten days of the arrival of any parcel in Calcutta; failing the payment within that time, Carr, Tagore & Co. may sell it at the market price; and should this be under the contract rate, you agree to pay the difference." Cl. 10 of the agreement was as follows: "As you have no authority to make advances previous to the receipt of the silk, and as Carr, Tagore & Co. stipulate for the advance in part of the sum which they are out of pocket, to carry on the flatures, the advances proposed being Rs50,000, at such times and in such portions as they may require after the delivery of the first parcel of silk under this contract, so that such advances shall not at any time be in excess of Rs50,000, beyond the silk delivered, for which interest at the rate of 6 per cent. will be allowed, and it is agreed that the question of advances shall be an open question; and that, in the event of advances being authorized, the contract shall at once be in force." The lower Court held that under these two clauses the defendants could not resort to the advances for their set-off; that the plaintiffs were not liable for the Rs18,024; and that the contract was not determined. Plaintiff also alleged a series of frauds on the part of their agents, with whom defendants were in collusion, but these charges were abandoned at the hearing. Held that acceptance by the agent binds the principal where there is no fraud; that voluntary acceptance of an agent's bill as payment discharges the principal; that a contract is not determined by death or bankruptcy of an agent, unless there has been an express stipulation to that effect; that an impossibility of fulfilling the terms of a contract must be clearly established in order to avoid a liability for breach thereof; that when a place of delivery is specified in a contract, delivery must be made there; that the plaintiff, having failed to prove alleged fraud in a deed, although entitled to relief under a distinct head of equity, will not be allowed to make a new case, and cannot, in the same suit, obtain a decree on the footing of the said deed; that amendment of a bill will not be allowed, if it appear that an account, being the relief attainable, would have been given if demanded, and that the plaintiff has not offered to perform his part of a contract and allow compensation for breaches thereof to the defendant and to pay any balance that should be found against him; that the mode of ascertaining damages for breach of contract prescribed in the contract must be adopted, and the remedy by action at once accrues. POLE v. upon the strength of it made over the notes to M who gave a receipt for them for and on behalf of K, and afterwards handed them over to the person who had brought him the letter. The letters were forgeries. In a suit against M by the Bank to recover the money paid to M,—Held that, in presenting the letter, in receiving the notes, and in granting a receipt for them, the defendant was in some sense an agent of K; but, inasmuch as the notes were given on the authority of the letter addressed to the plaintiff himself, and not in consequence of any representation made by the defendant, the latter could not be held liable for the loss sustained by the former. *MOONEY v. The defendant pleaded that the house in question was occupied by the Beni Israel school of Bombay which was maintained by the Anglo-Jewish Association of London, that he was Honorary Secretary of the school, and as such, and not in his personal capacity, had hired the house, and that he had never paid the rent or expenses of the school out of his own pocket. He contended that he was not liable to be sued personally. Held that the defendant was liable for the rent. 91. — Right to sue—Liability of agent—Charter party—Actual knowledge—Disclosure of name of principal at time of making the contract—Presumption of liability of agent where name of principal not disclosed—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 230.—The plaintiffs by charter-party contracted to let the steam-ship Oakdale to the defendants upon certain terms. The first clause of the charter-party stated that the plaintiffs "agreed as agents for owners of the said steam-ship," and subsequent clauses provided that the owners should bind themselves to receive the cargo on board, and that the master on behalf of the owners should have a lien on the cargo for freight, etc. The charter-party was signed by the plaintiffs and defendants in their own names. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for breach of the charter-party in refusing to load the said steam-ship. Held that the plaintiffs had contracted as agents, and were therefore not entitled to sue. If a contract made by a person who is an agent is worded so as, when taken as a whole, to convey to the other contracting party the notion that the agent is contracting in that character, he cannot sue or be sued on the contract. Where one contracting party knows that the other is contracting as an agent for a third person whose name he also knows, the presumption laid down in cl. 2 of s. 280 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) does not arise, although at the time of making the contract the agent does not disclose the name of his principal. The essential point is the knowledge, and actual knowledge is equivalent to disclosure, the whole object of which would be to convey such knowledge. *MACKINNON, MACKENZIE & Co. v. 92. — Liability of agent—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 280—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Charter-party—Employment of stevedores to load and discharge cargo.—The defendants let a steam-ship to the plaintiff for a certain term, and signed a charter-party "by and on behalf of the owners of the steam-ship A." The charter-party was a time-charter to commence on arrival at Calcutta, and to terminate at one of certain ports; the steamer in the interim to ply to and from any port the charterers pleased. It was agreed that the steamer should be provided "with a proper and sufficient crew of seamen, engineers, stokers, firemen, and other necessary persons for working cargo with all despatch;" and that in taking and discharging cargo, "the master and his crew with his boats shall be aiding and assisting to the utmost of their power;" and that "the owners or agents of the said steam-ship shall be held responsible to the said charterers for any incapacity, want of skill, insobriety, or negligence on the part of master, officers, engineers, stokers, firemen, or crew of the said steam-ship." The names of the principals were not disclosed in the charter-party, but were verbally disclosed before the charter-party was signed. In an action against the agents for damages for refusing to supply stevedores and other persons, in addition to the crew, when loading and discharging cargo,—Held that the presumption created by the second clause of s. 280 of the Contract Act is merely a prima facie one and may be rebutted, and that the contract was not personally binding on the agents, because the prima facie presumption of an intention to contract personally was rebutted by the language of the contract itself. Held also that the terms of the charter-party showed that the crew only were to assist in loading and discharging cargo; and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to call on those responsible for the steamer to load and discharge cargo by stevedores instead of by the crew. Reading the second part of s. 280

93. — On 6th April 1865 A, who resided and carried on business at Bombay, through his gomastah at Calcutta, shipped on board the Sir Jamsetjee Family 268 bags of sugar, and received from the captain a bill of lading by which he certified that they were shipped in good order and well-conditioned on board the said ship bound for Bombay, to be there delivered in like good order and well conditioned to B, or his assigns, on payment of freight at Rs 16 per ton. The bill of lading was subject to the usual exceptions. The vessel was at the time chartered to H A, and C & C were agents for the owners. H A being unable to carry out the terms of the charter, there was a delay in the departure of the vessel. On 26th May 1865 A wrote to C & C, addressing them as agents of the ship: "I beg to inform you that I have shipped per Sir Jamsetjee Family 268 bags of sugar for Bombay; I hold the bills of lading for the same, and the ship is still detained here. I hope you will be kind enough to let me know what you will do about the cargo, if the said ship will sail for Bombay or trans-ship to any other vessel, or deliver the cargo here." To which C & C on the same day replied: "We shall be able to tell you in the course of a week or so what we propose doing with the ship Sir Jamsetjee Family; as soon as any thing has been decided, due notice shall be given to the shippers of cargo already on board." On 1st June C & C again wrote: "H A having failed to carry out his charter of the Sir Jamsetjee Family in terms of the shipping order and sundry goods having been sent on board by him, of which the following are believed to be to your order, and for which bills of lading have been signed and delivered to H A, we shall be glad to know whether you are willing that the said goods—268 bags of sugar—be trans-shipped to a steamer going to Bombay, at the current rate of freight, the bills of lading for the same being sent to the owners of the Sir Jamsetjee Family, to be delivered to the consignees of the goods upon production of the bills of lading already signed. You will, of course, understand that the goods are liable for the chartered rate, viz., Rs 20-10 per ton; and the charterer having failed to complete the loading, the difference of freight between what H A granted you a shipping order at and the freight charged by the steamer will have to be paid by the shipper previous to the goods being delivered in Bombay." On the 8th June A replied: "I am agreed that my goods be trans-shipped to a steamer going to Bombay at the current rate of freight, but I must not pay the difference of freight, whatever it may be. In regard to H A, I have nothing to do with them, as the bills of lading per Sir Jamsetjee Family for 268 bags of sugar being signed by the captain of the same at the rate of freight, R16 per ton, I am liable for the same only. If you are willing to trans-ship my said goods to a steamer at the same rate of freight, I am willing and must pay it; otherwise you will kindly order to deliver my goods from Sir Jamseljee Family here." C & C accepted and acted on the proposal in the last letter. The sugar was trans-shipped from the Sir Jamseljee Family to the Gunga, from the mate of which C & C obtained a receipt, stating that the goods had been shipped in good order, etc. The goods were afterwards removed without the knowledge of C & C from the Gunga to another steamer, the Mula, which belonged to the same owners. Subsequently C & C gave up the receipt from the mate of the Gunga, and obtained in exchange a bill of lading signed by the agents for the captain of the Mula. The bill of lading stated the receipt of goods (in which were included those of A) from C & C, and made them deliverable to order of C & C, at Bombay, and receipt of freight for the whole at R15 per ton was admitted. A knew that his goods had been put on board the Mula, and got his policy of insurance, which was against a total loss only, transferred. There were inserted in red ink in the bill of lading when given to A the words, "Bags all more or less in bad order and torn; contents damaged and rotten; marks indistinct; not responsible for marks or condition of packages or contents." The Mula proceeded on her voyage, but returned to Calcutta with her cargo damaged by the perils of the sea: 260 of A's bags of sugar were condemned and sold in Calcutta, under the authority of the agents of the Mula, without notice to C & C or to A, and neither were aware that the sale was about to take place. The remaining eight bags were sent to Bombay in another ship by the agents of the Gunga and Mula, and were received by A. Held (overruling PHAR, J.) that C & C were agents only of the owners of the Sir Jamseljee Family; but had C & C been liable as agents for A, they would not have been liable for the full value of the goods damaged by the perils of the sea. Quere—If C & C had expressly, as agents of the owners of the Sir Jamseljee Family, contracted to trans-ship and deliver at Bombay, according to the terms of the bill of lading, would they have been personally liable? Semle—A contract made with express reference to a principal, though not by name, would not render the agent personally liable as the agent of an undisclosed principal. *COWIE v. acting as agents for the captain and owners of the ship, agreed with plaintiffs to carry certain of their goods on board the ship to Calcutta. The official instructions contained the following passage: "You will in all emergencies act as your discretion and judgment direct." At the same time, A sent a demi-official letter to B, in which, after several directions having reference to the disposal of the cargo, he added, "After getting all you can, I should think that the wreck ought to be burnt; but all is left to your discretion and judgment." In pursuance of these orders, the wreck was burnt without the consent of the owner. A subsequently ratified the act of his subordinate. Held, first, that A, by the expressions used in the demi-official letter, rendered himself liable as principal; and second, that B, as the agent directly concerned in causing the burning of the ship, was liable jointly with A to the owner for the damage occasioned thereby. *ABDOOLA BIN SHAIK ALLY v. The contract for the work was signed by the appellant alone, and it provided (among other things) that Y was to be allowed R20,000 out of every R1,00,000 paid to the appellant. By another agreement it was stipulated that the work should be examined and checked by Y or his agents. The appellant was discharged before the completion of the work, and he sued Y, M, and the ex-King jointly. Held that Y did not render himself personally liable, and that the contract was of such a description that the appellant was not entitled to a decree against the other respondents in respect of it, as both Y and the appellant were parties to a fraud on the ex-King. *BHOGHAN CHUNDER SEN v. 7. COMMISSION AGENTS.

104. ——— Unauthorized profits of agent—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 215, 216—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Contemporaneous oral agreement—Account-sales.—The plaintiffs, a firm of merchants, entered into an agreement (which was reduced to writing) with the defendants, who were dealers in coffee and other produce, to the following effect, viz., that all consignments of produce, which the defendants might make to Europe, should be made through the plaintiffs' firm; that the plaintiffs should receive a commission of 1 per cent. for themselves and 2½ per cent. for their agents at the port of consignment; that the plaintiffs should make certain advances to the defendants against the produce; and that the sums advanced should be repaid with interest "at such rates as may be fixed at the various dates of such loans, it being agreed that such interest is to be regulated by the then prevailing rate at the office of the Bank of Madras at Tellicherry." The written agreement was silent as to the mode of sale, rate of exchange, and other matters connected with the business; but it was at the same time further agreed orally that the sales of the defendants' produce were to be made under the directions and at the discretion of the plaintiffs. Business was carried on on the footing of the above agreements for eighteen months, during which period the plaintiffs furnished to the defendants copies of the account-sales for the consignments made through them, and they were accepted without objection by the defendants. The business resulted in the defendants becoming indebted to the plaintiffs; and about nine months after the date of the above-mentioned agreement the defendants executed in favour of the plaintiffs a mortgage in which the then amount their indebtedness was recited. The defendants became further indebted to the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs, having furnished them with an account of the transactions between them, now sued to recover the balance due. The defendants admitted the correctness of the debit side of the account, but denied in general terms that of the credit side. Evidence was given by the plaintiffs of the receipt of the account-sales in the ordinary course of business and of the delivery of copies to the defendants from time to time, and they were filed as exhibits without further proof. It appeared that in the account the defendants were charged on account of local exchange at a rate higher than that actually paid to the Bank, with which the plaintiffs had made a special arrangement without reference to the contract with the defendants. It also appeared that the plaintiffs, under an arrangement made with their agents at the ports of consignment, had received from them about 1 per cent. on the various consignments by way of return commission, and that this arrangement had not been communicated to the defendants. Held (1) that the account-sales were prima facie proof of the transactions to which they related; (2) that evidence of the contemporaneous oral agreement was admissible; (3) that the defendants were not entitled to the benefit of the special arrangement between the plaintiffs and the Bank; (4) that the plaintiffs were liable to the defendants for the amount received by them as return commission. MAYN v. ALSTON . . . I. L. R., 16 Mad., 238

105. ——— Principal and factor—Consignment for sale—Advances by factor on consignment—Right of factor to sell goods consigned to him for sale below the limit of price prescribed by consignor.—In January 1889 an agreement was made between the plaintiffs and the defendant which provided that the defendant in Bombay was to act for the plaintiffs "in influencing consignments of produce" to the care of the plaintiffs in London. Such produce was to be sold by the plaintiffs in London for a certain commission and brokerage. One of the terms of the agreement was that the business in England was to be worked entirely in the defendant's name, and the defendant was to "undertake to guarantee the plaintiffs free of all loss in connection with the said consignments and to guarantee the payment of redrafts, etc." On the 25th January 1889 the defendant consigned 435 packages of cloves to the plaintiffs in London and drew against the consignment a draft for £2,100 on the plaintiffs. In his consignment letter the defendant stated that the consignment was from his constituent C K, but that, as Rs 30,000 had been advanced to him, the consignment was shipped in the defendant's name. The letter continued: "The cost is 9½d. per pound, but he expects more, and not to be sold under the above rate." The sum drawn against the cloves (£2,100) was £400 in excess of their value, and on receipt of the consignment letter on the 11th February 1889, the plaintiffs at once telegraphed to the defendant to remit by cable £400 against overdraft against cloves. On the next day the defendant replied by telegraph: "I will remit you by outgoing mail." The plaintiffs accepted and paid the draft for £2,100 drawn against the cloves. The price of cloves in the London market fell rapidly. The defendant from time to time lowered the limit of price, but not to such an extent as to allow of a sale being effected. The lowest limit named by him was 6d. per pound on the 31st October 1889. In December 1889 the market price was only 5d. per pound, and the deficit owing to the plaintiffs was £1,300. The plaintiffs presented bills to the defendant for this balance, but they were refused. On the 5th February 1890, after due notice to the defendant, the 435 bales of cloves were sold, 20 of them at 4½d. per pound and 415 at 4¼d. The balance due to the plaintiffs in respect of this consignment after allowing for the proceeds of sale was £1,432-15-0. This sum was part of the amount for which the present suit was brought. The defendant contended that the plaintiffs were not justified in selling the cloves below the price limited, viz., 6d. per pound, and claimed to be credited with £329-1-8, which was the difference between the amount actually realized by the sale and the amount which would have been obtained if the cloves had been sold at the prescribed price. Held by FARRAN, J., and by the Court of appeal on the evidence (1) that the plaintiffs had accepted the consignment and had advanced money against it on condition of being kept in funds in case a deficit should arise owing to a falling market, and that the defendant acquiesced in that condition (2) that the plaintiffs had throughout claimed the right to sell if the condition was not observed, and that the defendant inferentially admitted the right claimed by the plaintiffs. The conclusion to be drawn was that the business was conducted on that basis, and that, when the condition was broken, the plaintiffs' right to sell arose according to the course of business, notwithstanding the limit of price imposed by the defendant. Per SARGENT, C.J.—The result of the authorities is to show that where a factor for sale, who has made advances, claims the right to sell, in vivo domino, the question is whether there was an agreement between the parties, either express or to be inferred, from the general course of business or from the circumstances attending the particular consignment, that the factor should under any and what circumstances have the power to sell against the wish of the owner of the goods. The onus of proving such agreement lies on the factor who has made the advances. Per FARRAN, J.—On the whole, the authorities warrant the inference that where goods are consigned to a foreign merchant as security for an advance, albeit he may be a factor entrusted with the sale of goods on commission, and where by reason of the fall in the market or other causes his security is declining in value, and becoming insufficient, such foreign merchant is invested with a power of sale over the goods after due notice to his principal, although the latter may place a limit on their sale, and desire to hold them on, if the principal do not put his factor in funds to make up the deficit so caused. JAFFERBOY LUDHABOY CHATTOO v. CHARLESWORTH . . . I. L. R., 17 Bom., 520

sale, and in respect of each consignment he received an advance from the plaintiff, who was the agent of the London firm, and signed a consignment note, which contained the following passage: "I hereby authorize you to sell the above goods at the best price obtainable without reference to me, and I give you full discretion and power to act on my behalf to the best of your judgment in regard to such sale and in all matters connected with the management of this consignment. Should there be any short fall after realization of the above consignment, I hereby authorize you to draw on me for the amount, and I engage to honour such draft and to pay it on presentation." The plaintiff guaranteed the payment of the redrafts to the London firm, on whose account he made the advances to the defendant. Short falls having occurred on certain consignments, and the London redrafts having been dishonoured, the plaintiff paid them, and now sued to recover the amount from the defendant. It appeared that consignments had been sold at prices less than certain limits which had been fixed by the defendant subsequent to the receipt of the advances and the signature of the consignment notes. Held that the defendant had no right (regard being had to the terms of the consignment note and the course of dealing between the parties) so to impose limits of price, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. KONDAYYA CHETTI v. 3. ——— Right of surety who has paid the debt to recover from principal.—Applying the law of England and Scotland and the general law of Europe to this country, it was held that, when a surety has paid off the debt of his principal, not only are all the collateral securities transferred to the surety, but by what is called subrogation, the right is also transferred to him to stand in the place of the original creditor, and to use against the principal debtor every remedy which the principal creditor himself could have used. Accordingly, the surety is not debarred from proceeding against the original debtor upon the instrument itself which created the debt, by reason of the debt having been paid by himself. HEERA LALL SAMANT v. OZZER ALI. 21 W. R., 347

2. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF SURETY.

4. ——— Extent of liability—Voluntary payments by principal.—The liability of a surety will not extend beyond the precise limits of his undertaking; he is not liable for any sum voluntarily paid by his principal to a third party for any purpose of his own. KHETTA NATH SEAL v. SHIB NATH CHATTERJEE. W. R., 1864, 284

5. ——— Specific contract—Liability of surety—Costs of suing principal.—Held that a surety's liability must be measured by the contract; and where the contract is specific, and not in general and in definite terms, the surety cannot be held liable for costs and interest incurred in suing the principal debtor. DABEE CHURN v. JANKER PERSHAD. 3 Agra, 141

6. ——— Liability on bond—Running account—Appropriation of payments—Joint bond—Notice to surety of default.—A principal and two sureties executed in favour of a bank a joint bond to secure the payment of a sum placed to the cash credit loan account of the principal, together with interest, and the premia on a policy of life assurance, within one year from the date of the bond. At the end of the year a considerable sum remained unpaid, but the principal continued dealing with the bank, and the account was continued for three years after the date of the bond as a running account, during which time divers sums were paid in by the principal, more than sufficient to discharge the amount due at the end of the first year from the date of the bond, and divers sums were in like manner drawn out. In a suit brought by the bank against the sureties to recover the amount due at the end of the first year, it was held that, inasmuch as the whole account from the date of the bond to the end of the principal's dealing with the bank had been treated as a running account, all payments made by the principal to the bank were to be appropriated to the earliest items in the account; and, inasmuch as all the moneys due on the bond at the end of the first year were thereby satisfied, no amount remained due on the bond. Semble—That for the purpose of giving persons who appear on the face of an instrument to have executed it as principals the equitable rights of sureties, they may show by evidence dehors the instrument that they executed only as sureties. Semble—That a surety is not entitled to notice of default made by the principal. Semble—That there being no express stipulation to the contrary, the fact that the principal was allowed a greater credit than that secured would not have discharged the sureties. KOONDAN LALL v. 7. ————— Sale of mortgaged property in execution of money-decree obtained by first mortgagee—Effect on second mortgagee's rights—Purchase by one of several joint mortgagees of mortgaged property—Limitation—Suit for sale of mortgaged property.—In January 1866 B obtained a simple money-decree only in a suit for enforcement of lien created by a bond executed by the wife of Z, and, at a sale in execution of such decree, a 10-biswas share hypothecated in the bond was sold and purchased by Z in November 1872. On the 3rd May 1872, two bonds were executed in favour of B and H jointly, the first by Z and I jointly hypothecating 6½ out of the above-mentioned 10 biswas, and the second by S, in which the obligor promised to pay the obligees the amount of the bond given by Z and I in the event of such amount not being paid by them, and mortgaged certain property as security for such payment by him. In December 1872 Z gave another bond to B hypothecating the same 10 biswas, and in execution of a decree obtained by B upon this bond the 10 biswas were sold and purchased by B himself in 1877, and in 1883 were sold by him to D. Subsequently, B and H brought a suit against Z and I, the joint obligors, under the bond of the 3rd May 1872, the heirs of their surety S, a purchaser from those heirs of the property mortgaged in the security-bond, and D, in which they claimed to recover the money due on the bond, by sale of the property mortgaged therein, and also by the sale of the property mortgaged in S's security bond. Held that, inasmuch as the bond executed by S was only a guarantee for the personal obligation created by the joint bond of Z and I, and a cause of action could only accrue as against him in respect of the personal default of the joint obligors to pay the bond-money, and such default occurred beyond the period of limitation within which a suit to enforce the personal obligation to pay the money could have been maintained, it followed that, had there been a claim in the plaint to obtain a decree personally against the joint obligors, the plea of limitation by which such a claim could have been defeated would have been equally efficacious as regards the heirs of S; but no such claim had been made, and the obligation of surety under his bond of the 3rd May 1872 being confined to the personal default of S, his heirs had been wrongly imported into the present litigation, which alone sought to enforce the hypothecation of

The Bank pressed for security or payment, and on the 5th September 1889 K executed, in favour of the Bank, two mortgages of certain immoveable properties, the value of which was estimated to be Rs. 1,35,000. The mortgages, though stamped to secure this amount only, were drawn to cover the whole liability of K to the Bank, and recited that he had become largely indebted to the Bank on certain bills, etc., and had agreed to give security in respect of such indebtedness as was thereafter expressed, and they contained covenants by K to pay to the Bank all sums of money then due, or thereafter to become due, by him in respect of such bills, etc. Besides the said two mortgages, the Bank obtained other securities for a further sum of Rs. 55,000, making the total sum secured Rs. 1,90,000, and leaving a balance of Rs. 1,25,000 unsecured. Under these circumstances, the Bank refused to renew certain bills of K's which fell due on the 9th September 1889, unless further security were given, and accordingly the plaintiff became surety for K for the sum of Rs. 1,25,000. This sum he was subsequently obliged to pay, and he then brought this suit claiming to share in the proceeds of the mortgages held as security by the Bank. He contended that these mortgages were given as security for the whole debt (viz., Rs. 1,50,000); that of this debt he as surety had paid a part, viz., Rs. 1,25,000, to the Bank; and that he was therefore to that extent entitled to stand in the place of the Bank and to receive a share of the proceeds of the said securities proportioned to the sum which he had paid. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to the benefit of the securities held by the Bank until the whole of the debt due to the Bank by K was paid. A surety, who has paid the debt which he has guaranteed, has a right to the securities held by the creditor, because as between the principal debtor and surety the principal is under an obligation to indemnify the surety. The equity between the creditor and the surety is that the creditor shall not do anything to deprive the surety of that right. But the creditor's right to hold his securities until his whole debt is paid is paramount to the surety's claim upon such securities, which only arises when the creditor's claim against such securities has been satisfied. GOVERDHANDAS GOKULDAS TEJPAL v. The effect of the deed being plain, neither appellant could escape liability except by proof of misrepresentation or undue influence. HODGES v. DELHI AND LONDON BANK

13. ——— Laches of creditor—What amounts to laches—Discharge of surety.—Plaintiff advanced money to K to enable him to complete a Government contract and repayment was secured by an assignment of the expected profits. The official to whom the arrangement was notified declined to recognize it, and this was known to all parties. K made default in payment, and the plaintiff, who had taken no further steps in applying to the Government for payment of profits according to the arrangement between himself and K, found that K had been drawing the profits. In a suit against the surety, who claimed to be exempt from liability at least to the extent of the profits which the plaintiff might by due diligence have received,—Held that the plaintiff had not neglected any imperative duty incumbent on him as a creditor, and that his conduct did not amount to laches so as to discharge the surety from any portion of his liability. DWARKANATH MITTAL v. that he should still continue to fill that office. He did so after his appointment as khajanchi, and he received the same salary as before in respect of it. In 1889 defalcations, for which as khajanchi he was responsible, were discovered to the extent of £1,42,142. The Bank obtained a decree against him for the total amount, and they sued the defendants as sureties. The defendants pleaded that they were not liable, inasmuch as the Bank had appointed B to perform the duties of second clerk, in addition to those of khajanchi without their knowledge and consent, and they contended that such appointment amounted to a subsequent variation of the contract, which discharged them under s. 133 of the Contract Act, as to transactions subsequent to the variance. The Court was of opinion that, inasmuch as the evidence showed that B was second clerk at the time of his appointment as khajanchi and continued afterwards to fill that office by arrangement between him and the agent of the Bank, the question was not whether there had been a subsequent variation of the contract, but whether, as the surety-bond was silent as to this part of the arrangement between the Bank and B, and it was made (as the defendants alleged) without their knowledge and consent, they were discharged from liability on the ground that a material circumstance had been concealed from them. Held that the defendants were not discharged from liability. The expression "keeping silence" in s. 143 of the Contract Act clearly implies intentional concealment as distinguished from mere non-disclosure. The withholding must be fraudulent, as necessarily is the case when a material circumstance is intentionally concealed. In this case there was not the slightest reason to suppose that there had been any intentional concealment by the Bank of the fact that B was to continue to fill the office of second clerk, or that, if the defendants had been informed of it, it would have in the least degree affected their readiness to make themselves liable for his faithful discharge of the duties of khajanchi. The evidence showed that the duties of the two offices were perfectly distinct, and therefore, even if B had been re-appointed to the office of second clerk after his appointment to the office of khajanchi (as it was contended for the defendants was the proper way of regarding what occurred), there would have been no material alteration in the duties of khajanchi which would have relieved the defendants from their obligation as sureties, but merely the addition of a new office which would not affect the sureties' liability, unless, indeed, the surety-bond contained an agreement that the principal should not undertake any other business. It was also contended for the defendants that they were discharged from liability, inasmuch as in the year 1883 the names on certain bills discounted with the Bank were found to be forged. The Bank then made a claim upon B in respect thereof, and he repudiated his liability. The defendants contended, on the authority of Phillips v. Fowall, L. R., 7 Q. B., 666, that it was the duty of the Bank to have informed them of this occurrence at that time. Held (distinguishing Phillips v. Fowall) that it could not have been assumed that B was infallible in detecting forgeries, and the guarantee given by the defendants was not therefore founded on that assumption, and therefore fair dealing could not require that the Bank should at once have informed the sureties as soon as B had proved to be fallible. BALKRISHNA KIRTIKAR v. BANK OF BENGAL. I. L. R., 15 Bom., 586

29. ——— Subsequent arrangement—

Obtaining fresh acknowledgment from debtor.—Money was lent on the security of a third party who died before the loan was repaid. 31. ——— Neglect to register bond—Suit for money lent against principal.—In a suit against a principal and two sureties, to recover the amount advanced on a bond by which certain immoveable property was mortgaged, one of the sureties appeared and contended that he was discharged from his liability in consequence of the plaintiff's neglect to have the bond registered. Held that the surety was discharged, as he could only be liable by virtue of the mortgage-bond, which, being invalid for want of registration, could not be used against him. The principal, however, might be sued as for money lent, if the loan could be proved by the other evidence. SHANKAR BAPU v. VISHNU NARAYAN

32. ——— Bills of exchange—Deposit of goods as collateral security for repayment—Sale by creditor of goods deposited as security.—A drew five bills in favour of B on F & Co., who accepted them and got them discounted by the Bank of Bengal, and on their becoming due procured their renewal. F & Co. subsequently drew three bills on the Bank; and for securing as well the repayment of the principal sum due on these bills and interest, as of all sums which the Bank had already advanced or should advance on account of the drawers, deposited as collateral security various quantities of Chili copper of a larger amount in value than the advances then made. By a condition in these bills, the Bank was authorized, in default of payment within the time stipulated, to dispose of the copper by public or private sale, and to reimburse themselves the principal and interest due thereon. Shortly afterwards F & Co. failed, and assignees of their estate and effects were appointed under the Insolvent Act. On presentation to A of the first of the renewed bills, he served notice on the Bank not to part with the securities deposited with them, alleging that the bills drawn and renewed by him were accommodation bills, for which he had not received any consideration, and were renewed on the faith of the securities being applicable to their discharge. The assignees of F & Co. redeemed the copper by paying to the Bank the amount of the principal and interest due on the bills drawn by F & Co., all the bills drawn by A were dishonoured, and the Bank of Bengal brought an action against A for their amount. On a bill filed by A, the Bank was restrained by injunction from proceeding with the action at law. Held on appeal by the Judicial Committee, discharging the injunction and reversing the decree of the Supreme Court, that, under the circumstances, the redemption of the securities was a sale within the meaning of the condition contained in the deposit bills, and that such sale was not a release to A as surety for the previous bills, the condition not being that the copper or the proceeds thereof should be applied preferentially or pari passu with the other debts, but simply in reimbursement to the Bank of the principal and interest due on the bills. *BANK OF BENGALE v. 33. — Agreement for payment of decree, or in default to execute it—Failure to execute it on default—Act IX of 1872, ss. 134, 137, 139, and 141.—A decree-holder, in execution proceedings, agreed to accept payment of the decretal amount by the judgment-debtors in annual instalments. He also accepted from certain other persons a surety-bond in the following terms: "In case of default of paying the instalments, the whole decretal money, with costs and interest at 8 annas per cent., shall be executed after one month; and for the satisfaction of the decree-holder we, the executors, stand as sureties of the judgment-debtors." The judgment-debtors paid five instalments and then made default. The decree-holder omitted to apply for execution, and the decree became time-barred. He then sued the sureties to recover the amount of the decree. Held that the terms of the bond requiring the creditor to execute his decree within one month were peremptory, and imported much more than the usual agreement under such circumstances; that the decree-holder might execute his decree, if he pleased, on a default; that the legal consequence of his omission to execute the decree being the discharge of the principal debtors, the sureties would, under s. 134 of the Contract Act, stand discharged likewise; that his action was much more serious than "mere forbearance" in favour of his debtors, in the sense of s. 137; that he had done an act inconsistent with the equities of the sureties, and omitted to do an act which his duty to them (under the agreement) required, whereby their eventual remedy against the principal debtors was impaired (s. 139); that he had deprived the sureties of the benefit of the security constituted by the decree; that they were therefore discharged to the extent of the value of that security (s. 141); and that the suit must consequently be dismissed. *HAZARI v. 34. — Giving time to principal—Execution of subsequent agreement unknown to surety.—A and his surety B executed a bond to C for the faithful discharge of A's duties as a gomashtha. In September 1868, upon accounts being rendered, A was found indebted to C in a certain sum of money. A thereupon executed an ikrar to C, which was accepted by C agreeing thereby to pay the amount due in February following. On default being made, C sued A and B for the amount due. Held that the acceptance of the ikrar, without the knowledge or consent of B giving time for payment, was a discharge to the surety. *PURI SUNDARI DEBI v. 36. — Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 37, 39, 66—Contract Act, s. 135—Accommodation maker, Discharge of—Presentment of promissory note.—Suit by the endorsee against the maker of a promissory note, dated 9th August 1886. The plaintiff was aware that the note was made by the defendant for the accommodation of the acceptor, Watson & Co., with whom the plaintiff had large dealings. On the 4th August 1887, Watson & Co. executed in favour of the plaintiff and another creditor a mortgage of certain property to secure the amount then due by Watson & Co., including the amount due to the plaintiff on the promissory note: the mortgage contained a personal covenant by Watson & Co. to pay the sums due, together with interest on the 4th August 1888; and the mortgagees practically took over the whole business of the mortgagor, and it was intended that they should work it for his benefit up to that date. The promissory note fell due in June 1887, but was not presented to the defendant for payment. Held that the plaintiff, by accepting the mortgage, promised to give time to Watson & Co., and thus rendered it impossible for him to sue Watson & Co. had the defendant as surety called on him to do so, and that the defendant was accordingly discharged. *Pogose v. Rs. 500, payable forty-one days after date in the usual way, and it was stipulated between him and S A that the value should be paid by S A in three days. On 15th September, the plaintiff in Calcutta discounted the hundi in the ordinary course of business, paying for it Rs. 468, or thereabouts. It then purported to be accepted by the defendant in favour of S A. Before the hundi fell due, S A failed, and the plaintiff took the hundi to the defendant in Calcutta, and, informing him of S A's failure, asked him to pay the hundi. The defendant admitted he had drawn the hundi, denied he had accepted it, and refused to pay, saying (he alleged) that he had received no consideration for it. Before the failure of S A, who had not paid the consideration as stipulated, the defendant pressed him for payment of the consideration for the hundi, and S A wrote and delivered to the defendant the following letter, dated September 16th, 1867, from himself to his firm in Calcutta: "Further, I sent you a chitti (hundi) for Rs. 500, drawn by Bhugwan Das (the defendant) upon Bhugwan Das upon (us), Calcutta; value deposited by me on September 13th, 1867, payable forty-one days after date in Company's rupees. I have taken a hundi of this description, which you will pay on its due date. The money has not been paid, for which I give this puja in writing, which you will know." After S A's failure, and after the defendant's refusal to pay on the due date, the plaintiff made the arrangement with S A, which is embodied in the following letter from S A to the plaintiff, dated November 3rd, 1867: "Further, I discounted with you at Calcutta hundis for Rs. 5,000, which, one Pitam Das coming to Calcutta, were paid off in the following manner: a hundi for Rs. 500 drawn by Bhugwan Das on Bhugwan Das value deposited by me on the 15th day of the light side of the moon in Bhadra, payable forty-one days after date in Company's rupees; and a hundi for Rs. 500 by Gapi Shaw, Debi Shaw, Radha Shaw, Ram Sahayi Roy, value deposited by me on 14th day of the light side of the moon in Bhadra payable forty-one days after date in Company's rupees. I discounted hundis of this description, and out of them I paid Rs. 2,200 in cash through Syad Mahomed Hossein Khan Sahib. The balance, Rs. 2,800, is due, the condition for payment of which is as follows (here follows the manner in which payment was to be made): I made an agreement of this sort, and I will pay the whole of the amount, inclusive of interest at 8 annas, and will take the two hundis from Bhai Ram Kissen Futteh Chund, with whom they are kept. Should I not pay the money according to the condition, then you have the authority." For the defendant it was contended that the effect of the letter of 16th September was to make the defendant a surety only for S A; that the plaintiff had notice of this at the time of entering into the agreement giving time to S A, which therefore operated as a release to the defendant. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover the amount of the hundi from the defendant, the Court found that it was not proved that the hundi had been accepted by the defendant, but held that, whether the effect of the agreement contained in the

1. ——— Commencement of, and restrictions on, right—Penal Code, ss. 97, 99.—The right of private defence as described in s. 97 of the Penal Code is subject to the restrictions mentioned in s. 99, that is, it should be exercised only in the defence of one's own body or that of another person against an offence affecting the human body. Under s. 102, the right commences only on a reasonable apprehension of danger to the body caused by an attempt or threat to commit an offence, and by s. 99, cl. 4, the right is restricted to not inflicting more harm than it is necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence. *QUEEN v. The right of private defence of property commences when a reasonable apprehension of danger to the property commences. Before such apprehension commences, the owner of the property is not called upon to apply for protection to the public authorities. The apprehension which justifies a recourse to the authorities ought to be based on some information of a definite kind as to the time and place of the danger actually threatened. seed sown in it. At about 3 o'clock next morning he was informed that the complainants had entered on his land and were ploughing up the seed. Thereupon he at once proceeded to the spot, followed by the other accused, and remonstrated with the complainants. The complainants, without paying any attention to his remonstrances, commenced an attack on the accused. In the fight which ensued, both sides received serious injuries, and the leader of the complainants' party was killed. The accused were thereupon charged and convicted, under ss. 304, 114, 325, and 323 of the Penal Code, of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, and of causing hurt. Held, reversing the convictions, that the complainants being the aggressors, the accused had, under the circumstances, the right of private defence, both of person and of property, and that, in the exercise of this right, they did not inflict more harm than was necessary. Held also that the accused were not bound to act on the information received on the previous evening and seek the protection of the public authorities, as they had no reason to apprehend a night-attack on their property. *QUEEN-EMRESS v. Public function.—In a suit filed in a Mamlatdar's Court under Bombay Act III of 1876, the plaintiff obtained a decree against the accused for possession of a certain piece of land. When the Mamlatdar proceeded to execute the decree, he found that there was no land corresponding to the boundaries set forth in the plaint, and that the parties were joint owners and in joint occupation of the land in dispute. Finding himself unable to execute the decree, the Mamlatdar referred the matter to the Collector for advice. The Collector, on looking into the papers of the case, ordered a surveyor to execute the decree by dividing the land in dispute and putting the decreeholder in possession of his share. The surveyor, in attempting to execute the decree, was obstructed by the accused, who was thereupon tried and convicted of voluntarily obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his public functions, under s. 186 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). Held that the Collector's order was entirely ultra vires as to leave no room for the operation of either the first or the second clause of s. 99 of the Penal Code, as to right of private defence. QUEEN-EMRESS v. The debtor forcibly resisted the officer, and was tried and convicted, under s. 353 of the Penal Code, of assaulting a public servant in the execution of his duty as such. Held, with reference to s. 99 of the Penal Code, that the act of the accused did not cease to be an offence on the ground that it was done in the exercise of the right of private defence. QUEEN-EMRESS v. 24. ————— Rioting—Unlawful assembly—Right of private defence of property
—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 97, 103, 104, 105, and 107.—A party of persons consisting of some five peedas and a number of coolies sufficient for the work to be done went to a spot on a river flowing through the lands of M for the purpose of either repairing or erecting a bund across it to cause the water to flow down a channel on the lands of their master T. The river at the time was almost dry, and the party did not go armed ready to fight or use force, and they did not during the subsequent occurrence use force. Having arrived at the spot about 10 A.M., they proceeded to work at the bund until the afternoon. At about 4 P.M. a body of men, consisting about 1,200 in all, many of them armed with lathis and headed by the prisoners, who were servants of M, which had been seen collecting together during the day, proceeded to the spot, and about 25 or 30 of them attacked T's men, some five of whom were more or less severely wounded with the lathis. The occurrence resulted in the conviction of some of M's servants for rioting under s. 147 of the Penal Code. M's people wholly denied any right on the part of T to construct or repair the bund, and had previously denied the existence of such right and refused permission to T to exercise it. It was contended that the assembly of M's people was not an "unlawful assembly"; that the interference by T's people with the channel of the river justified them in coming to stop the work, and the show and use of force in compelling them to do so. Held that the prisoners had been rightly convicted. Held further that, as no right of private defence of property is conferred by the Penal Code, except as against the perpetrators of offences under the Penal Code, and that, as upon the facts of the case as found no offence had been committed by T's people, their acts amounting merely to a civil trespass, and as there was no pressing or immediate necessity of a kind, showing that there was no time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities, no question as to the right of private defence arose in the case. GANOURI LAL DAS v. 1. ————— Professional communication —Attorney and client—Privilege—Act I of 1872, s. 126.—To be privileged under s. 126 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), a communication by a party to his attorney must be of a confidential or private nature. Where defendants at an interview, at which the plaintiff was present, admitted their partnership to their attorney, who was then also acting as attorney for the plaintiff,—Held that the attorney was not precluded by s. 126 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) from giving evidence of this admission to him: 1st, because the defendants' statements, having been made in presence and hearing of the plaintiff, could not be regarded as confidential or private; 2nd, because those statements did not appear to have been made to the attorney exclusively in his character of attorney for the defendants, but to have been addressed to him also as attorney for the plaintiff. MEMON HAJEE HAROON MAHOMED v. ABDUL KARIM . . . I. L. R., 3 Bom., 91

2. ————— Privilege, Extent of—How far solicitor bound to disclose communication made in course of employment—Attorney and client—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 126.—The law relating to professional communications between a solicitor and a client is the same in India as in England. It is not every communication made by a client to an attorney that is privileged from disclosure. The privilege extends only to communications made to him confidentially, and with a view to obtaining professional advice. Where a solicitor claims privilege under s. 126 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), he is bound to disclose the name of his client, on whose behalf he claims the privilege. The mere fact that the client's name had been communicated to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as solicitor by another client, affords no excuse, unless it was communicated to him confidentially, on the express understanding that it was not to be disclosed. But a solicitor is not at liberty, without his client's express consent, to disclose the nature of his professional employment. S. 126 of the Indian Evidence Act protects from publicity not merely the details of the business, but also its general purport, unless it be known alioquin that such business falls within proviso I or II to the section. At an interview between a solicitor and a client, the solicitor took down a certain statement made by a person named A B, who was in his client's company, and whose name was communicated to him in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment. A B was afterwards tried for defamation, and the solicitor was examined by the prosecution with reference to the statement made to him by the accused at the above interview. The solicitor was asked whether the person who had made the statement had given his name as A B. The solicitor declined to answer the question on the ground of privilege. Held that the solicitor was bound to answer the question, unless A B's name was communicated to him by his client in confidence with a view to its not being disclosed. FRAMJI BHICAJI v. MOHANSING DEANSING. I L. R., 18 Bom., 268

3. — Communication to Mukhtars acting as pleaders for their clients—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 126.—The restrictions imposed by s. 126 of the Evidence Act in respect of what are known as privileged communications extend also to communications made to mukhtars when acting as pleaders for their clients. ABBAS PRADA v. 6. — Act II of 1855, s. 24—Mukhtar and client.—The question whether a communication between the accused and witness is privileged, is a question of law for the Judge to decide. servants to another for the purpose of obtaining information with a view to possible future litigation are not privileged, even though they might, under the circumstances, be required for the use of the defendant's solicitor. In order that privilege may be claimed, it must be shown on the face of the affidavit that the documents were prepared or written merely for the use of the solicitor. BIPRO DOSS DAX v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL

10. — Letters between solicitors for various plaintiffs—Attorney and client—Inspection—Production—Waiver of privilege.—The plaintiffs resided in England, and sued the defendant in Bombay for specific performance of an agreement to purchase certain premises. This agreement had been made on behalf of the plaintiffs by S, their agent in Bombay. The defendant pleaded that by the terms of the agreement it was provided that the deed of assignment should contain a covenant by the three plaintiffs to indemnify the defendant against any claims upon the premises that might be made at any time by or on behalf of the representatives of one N. The defendant's solicitor prepared a draft assignment which contained this covenant, and sent it to the plaintiff's solicitors (Messrs. P and W) for approval. On the 19th March 1880 W called upon B, the defendant's solicitor, and informed him that M, the third plaintiff, refused to sign any deed which contained the above covenant. At this interview W read to B portions of a letter written with reference to the proposed deed by McG & Co. (solicitors for the first two plaintiffs) to V, the solicitor of the third plaintiff, and of another letter written by V to his client, the third plaintiff. The defendant called upon the plaintiff to produce these letters for inspection. Held that the letters were privileged, and that the fact that portions of them had been read to the defendant's solicitor was no waiver of the privilege as regarded the parts which were not read. KAY v. POORUNCHAND POONALAL. I L. R., 4 Bom., 631

11. — Letters by client to solicitor—Discovery—Affidavit of documents—Sufficiency of affidavit—Further affidavit—Inspection of documents—Practice.—Where in an affidavit of documents privilege is claimed for a correspondence on the ground that it contains instructions and confidential communications from the client (the plaintiff) to his solicitor, it must appear not merely that the correspondence generally contains instructions, etc., but that each letter contains instructions or confidential communications to the attorneys with reference to the conduct of the suit. *Bewicke v. 13. — Statement to punchayet—Illegal conviction for defamation.—Where a person called upon by a punchayet, convened by the complainant's relatives, to explain why he had made a defamatory remark concerning the complainant, made a statement by way of explanation,—Held that, such statement being privileged, a conviction for defamation for making such statement was illegal. IN RE GOVINDAPPA NAYAK . . . 14. — Petition to Revenue Officer — Defamation — Presumptions as to malice.—Certain raiyats in a zamindari village addressed a petition to the tehsildar praying that the Village Munsif might be retained in office notwithstanding the zamindar's application for his removal. The petition imputed criminal acts to the zamindar, who now sued the petitioners for damages on the ground that the petition contained a false and malicious libel. It was found that in fact the communication was made bond fide, and that there was some ground for some of the imputations. Held the petition was a privileged communication, and the alleged libel was not actionable. The question when malice may be presumed, discussed. VENKATA NARASIMHA v. KOTAYYA . . . I. L. R., 12 Mad., 374

15. — Communication by a servant of a company to one of his subordinates as to another subordinate—Defamation.—In an action for damages for defamation brought by a brewer recently employed by a brewery company against the local manager of the company, the defamatory statements complained of were contained in a letter written by the defendant to the directors of the company, and also in a letter written to another brewer in the employ of the company, in which he said that the plaintiff, "had failed most utterly, and I have been compelled to inform him that you will take the position of senior brewer at the brewery." Held that all these statements were in the nature of privileged communications. LEISHMAN v. HOLLAND . . . I. L. R., 14 Mad., 51

16. — Letter from husband to wife — Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 122.—Letter taken on search of wife's house.—On a trial for the offence of breach of trust by a public servant, a letter was tendered in evidence for the prosecution which had been sent by the accused to his wife at Pondicherry and had been found on a search of her house made there by the police. Held that the letter was not inadmissible in evidence against the accused as being a privileged communication. S. 122 of the Evidence Act was not applicable. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. DONAGHUE . . . I. L. R., 22 Mad., 1

1. ADMISSION TO PRACTICE.

1. ——— Rules of 31st of March 1871—Vakil of High Court.—The words of ss. 2 and 3 of the Rules of 31st March 1871 are such that the classes of persons to be admitted to practise in the Privy Council must be either solicitors or others practising in London, or solicitors admitted by the High Court in India or in the Colonies, respectively, and have not left an undefined class admissible at the discretion of the Judicial Committee. 2. RECORD, PREPARATION OF.

2. ——— Decision limited to one of several issues of law—Omission of immaterial matter in preparation of printed book.—In a suit in which the original Court had framed and decided several issues, the High Court on appeal confined their decision to the questions which in their opinion governed the case, leaving other issues undecided as not affecting the result after the decision to which they had come. Afterwards the suit was admitted to appeal in conformity with s. 603, Code of Civil Procedure. In the preparation of the printed copy of the record the question arose whether the copy should be made of the whole record, or of only so much of it as was material to the correctness of the High Court's decision. Their Lordships directed that only so much of the original record as bore upon, and was material to, the questions decided by the High Court, and the subject of the appeal, should be printed in the copy. 4. ENLARGING TIME FOR APPEAL.

4. ——— Jurisdiction of Judicial Committee as to application to enlarge time for appeal.—The Judicial Committee have no jurisdiction to entertain an application for extension of time to appeal until the petition of appeal is lodged. Where it appeared that an inquiry was pending before the Master in the Court below, arising out of the decree which was the subject of the appeal, the result of which might render the prosecution of the appeal unnecessary, the Judicial Committee enlarged the time prescribed by Rule 5 of the Order in Council of 18th June 1853 for prosecution thereof, until further order. GUNGADHUR SEAL v. RADDAMONEY DOSSETT . 6 Moore's I. A., 209

5. SPECIAL LEAVE TO APPEAL.

5. ——— Form of petition—Amendment of a petition too general and vague.—It is incumbent upon a party applying for special leave to appeal to set out in the petition a full statement of the facts and legal grounds, to show that there is a substantial case on the merits, and a point of law involved, proper to be determined by the Appellate Court. A petition for special leave to appeal contained a general statement of the proceedings in India, and an averment that they were irregular and contrary to law. Such petition ordered to be dismissed or to stand over for amendment as being too general and vague. On the amended petition, stating in detail the facts, and specifically showing legal grounds of objection to the decrees and order of the Court below refusing leave to appeal, special leave to appeal was granted. GORRE MONKE DOSSETT v. JUGGUT INDRO NARAIN CROWDEY . 11 Moore's I. A., 1

6. ——— Application for special leave—Omission of material facts—Costs.—A petition for special leave to appeal being ex-parte, it is a universal and most important rule of the Court that every fact which is material to the determination of the question raised upon the petition should be truly and fairly stated, and where there is an omission of material facts, whether it arises from improper intention on the part of the petitioner, or whether it arises from accident or negligence, still the effect is the same, if the Court has been induced to make an order which, if the facts had been fully before it, it would not, or might not, have been induced to make. Where the Court was of opinion that there had been no intentional misrepresentation, and that there had been delay on the other side, it discharged an order giving special leave to appeal where an important fact had been kept from the Court, without costs, remarking that it would have thought it right, whether the mistake was intentional or not, to have given costs, had it not been for the delay. 13. ———— Alteration of practice by High Court—Appeal from original decree and order refusing review.—Pending proceedings before the High Court on an application for a review of judgment, that Court altered the then prevailing practice of permitting an appeal within six months from the date of the judgment allowing or refusing a review. In such circumstances, the six months prescribed by the Order in Council of the 16th April 1838 from the date of the decree having expired, special leave to appeal from the original decree and the order refusing a review was allowed. NOGENDRO CHUNDER GHOSH v. MAHOMED EUSUFF [12 Moore's I. A., 107]

14. ———— Case under appealable value—Subject-matter at issue exceeding appealable value.—Special leave to appeal granted, notwithstanding that no application had been made for such leave to the Court below, upon the allegation that, though the amount decreed was much under the appealable value, the original demand being necessarily limited by the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit was originally instituted, yet the subject-matter at issue exceeded in value the appealable amount. *MUTUSAWMY JAGAVERA YETTAPA NAIKER v. 15. ———— Leave granted on terms—Provision for payment of compensation agreed on.—Where the Court grants leave to appeal under the general jurisdiction of the Queen in Council, it will impose such terms upon the party applying as the special circumstances of the case require. Appeal admitted from an order confirming the report of the commissioners in a partition suit, although the appealable value was under £10,000, the amount prescribed by the Order in Council of the 10th April 1838. The petitioner (the plaintiff) had offered to compensate the defendant if the report of the commissioners was varied. The Judicial Committee, in granting leave to appeal, put the petitioner upon terms of lodging in the Council office, within four months, a certificate of recognizance to the Queen in the sum of £1,500 for such compensation and costs as might be awarded. IN RE SIBNABAIN GHOSH . 5 Moore's I. 16. ———— Value of the subject-matter disputed.—The value of the subject-matter in dispute, though laid in the plaint at a sum exceeding the minimum amount, £10,000, was reduced on calculation by the Zillah Judge to an amount under that sum, and the finding on the merits was for the plaintiff for such reduced sum. In a cross-appeal the Sudder Court dismissed the entire claim, and, on the ground that the matter in dispute was under the appealable value, refused leave to appeal to England. On special petition, leave to appeal was granted, the appellant claiming to open the question of the value of the subject-matter in question

2. RECORD, PREPARATION OF.

2. ——— Decision limited to one of several issues of law—Omission of immaterial matter in preparation of printed book.—In a suit in which the original Court had framed and decided several issues, the High Court on appeal confined their decision to the questions which in their opinion governed the case, leaving other issues undecided as not affecting the result after the decision to which they had come. Afterwards the suit was admitted to appeal in conformity with s. 608, Code of Civil Procedure. In the preparation of the printed copy of the record the question arose whether the copy should be made of the whole record, or of only so much of it as was material to the correctness of the High Court's decision. Their Lordships directed that only so much of the original record as bore upon, and was material to, the questions decided by the High Court, and the subject of the appeal, should be printed in the copy. 4. ENLARGING TIME FOR APPEAL.

4. ——— Jurisdiction of Judicial Committee as to application to enlarge time for appeal.—The Judicial Committee have no jurisdiction to entertain an application for extension of time to appeal until the petition of appeal is lodged. Where it appeared that an inquiry was pending before the Master in the Court below, arising out of the decree which was the subject of the appeal, the result of which might render the prosecution of the appeal unnecessary, the Judicial Committee enlarged the time prescribed by Rule 5 of the Order in Council of 13th June 1853 for prosecution thereof, until further order. GUNGADHUR SEAL v. RADDAMONEY DOSSEE . 6 Moore's I. A., 209

5. SPECIAL LEAVE TO APPEAL.

5. ——— Form of petition—Amendment of a petition too general and vague.—It is incumbent upon a party applying for special leave to appeal to set out in the petition a full statement of the facts and legal grounds, to show that there is a substantial case on the merits, and a point of law involved, proper to be determined by the Appellate Court. A petition for special leave to appeal contained a general statement of the proceedings in India, and an averment that they were irregular and contrary to law. Such petition ordered to be dismissed or to stand over for amendment as being too general and vague. On the amended petition, stating in detail the facts, and specifically showing legal grounds of objection to the decrees and order of the Court below refusing leave to appeal, special leave to appeal was granted. GORRE MOHIE DOSSEE v. JUGGUT INDRU NARAIN CHOWDREY . 11 Moore's I. A., 1

6. ——— Application for special leave—Omission of material facts—Costs.—A petition for special leave to appeal being ex-parte, it is a universal and most important rule of the Court that every fact which is material to the determination of the question raised upon the petition should be truly and fairly stated, and where there is an omission of material facts, whether it arises from improper intention on the part of the petitioner, or whether it arises from accident or negligence, still the effect is the same, if the Court has been induced to make an order which, if the facts had been fully before it, it would not, or might not, have been induced to make. Where the Court was of opinion that there had been no intentional misrepresentation, and that there had been delay on the other side, it discharged an order giving special leave to appeal where an important fact had been kept from the Court, without costs, remarking that it would have thought it right, whether the mistake was intentional or not, to have given costs, had it not been for the delay. A suit was brought to recover a samindari in the possession of different persons under deeds of sale in execution of a decree. The value of the property was, by Bengal Regulation X of 1829, stated in the plaint to be £14,325. The Sudder Court upheld the sales so far as related to the claim of some of the defendants. The other defendants applied for leave to appeal to England, which the Sudder Court refused, on the ground that, as the value of their portion was only £8,215, it was not within the appellable value; but this construction was overruled by the Judicial Committee, and leave was granted to appeal. Quære—Whether the stamp on the plaint required by Regulation X of 1829, s. 17, being for fiscal purposes only, is conclusive of the value of the property sued for. *AMEENA KHATOON v. 9. STAY OF PROCEEDINGS IN INDIA PENDING APPEAL.

46. ——— Refusal to stay proceedings

—Appeal specially admitted by Privy Council.—By a decree of the Sudder Court at Calcutta a suit was remanded to the Zillah Court to be tried de novo. An appeal to England from this decree was refused, but, upon special application, was admitted by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; whereupon the appellant applied to the High Court at Calcutta to stay proceedings pending the appeal to England, on the ground that the decision of the Appellate Court would govern the question at issue, which application that Court refused. The appellant then presented a petition to Her Majesty in Council, and applied ex-parte for the same relief, but the Judicial Committee, in the respondent's absence, refused to make any order, though without prejudice to the petitioner's further application when he had served the respondent. *PERLADH SEIN v. Where therefore an appellant from an order of the High Court of Judicature, which remitted back a cause appealed to that Court from the Zillah Court for the trial of issues framed in accordance with the provisions of Act XIII of 1859, s. 139, having failed in obtaining an order from the High Court to stay proceedings in the Zillah Court pending the appeal, but not having appealed from that decision, presented a petition to Her Majesty in Council praying that all proceedings in the remanded suit might be stayed till the pending appeal had been heard, the Judicial Committee, without determining the question of their right to interfere in such circumstances, held that the petitioner had not shown any such injury, or used such expedition as entitled him to ask for a stay of proceedings. Quere—Whether, where an order has been made by the superior Court below refusing to stay proceedings, and such order is not specially appealed

This accompanied a petition for special leave to appeal against those orders. The latter was granted, but it not being competent to the Judicial Committee to make any order as to the stay of execution, an intimation was made by it to the Court below that it appeared to be the reasonable course that the opposite party should not, pending the appeal, be put into possession of the large sums in dispute. 52. ——— Stay of proceedings in India pending appeal—Protection of property pending an appeal by special leave—Order for stay of proceedings—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), Ch. XLV.—Special leave of Her Majesty in Council was obtained for the filing an appeal from a decree of the High Court affirming the dismissal of the petitioner's suit. The High Court rejected his application as plaintiff (appellant) for an order staying execution and continuing the possession of a manager of the estate in litigation pending the result of the appeal. The rejection was grounded on the absence of authority for this purpose, the High Court being authorized in their judgment only to make such an order in regard to appeals admitted by themselves. On the petition that the High Court's decision might be reversed or such order made as would protect the property to abide the ultimate disposal of the suit, their Lordships were of opinion that direct interference to continue the management or to appoint a Receiver was impracticable. But that, on the other hand, interference had, on occasions, been effected where, the appellant being in possession, an order for stay of proceedings had maintained the existing state of things. Therefore, an order staying proceedings should now be recommended by them, the petitioner being answerable in damages, and any aggrieved respondent having leave to move for the discharge of the order. On the appeal being opened, the Court postponed the hearing for six months, to enable the Official Assignee in insolvency in Calcutta to revive the appeal and prosecute the same, and in default the appeal to be dismissed; and directed the respondents to serve the Official Assignee in India with such notice. After the allowance of the appeal, no further steps were taken by the appellant. 62. ——— Appeal dismissed through "unavoidable accident"—Acts XVI of 1845, XXIX of 1841, and XV of 1853, s. 6—Costs.—Act XVI of 1845, amending Act XXIX of 1841, enacts that it is competent to the Sudder Court in the case of the dismissal of an appeal for want of prosecution, upon the application of the appellant within three months after the appeal has been dismissed, to re-admit the appeal, if the appellant satisfies the Court that the dismissal was "occasioned by the default of his vakil or by unavoidable accident." An appeal was made to the Sudder Court at Calcutta, but in consequence of the absence from illness of the appellant's mukhtar the written reasons of appeal were not lodged within six weeks, the time prescribed by Act XV of 1853, s. 6, and the appeal was dismissed. Upon application for re-admission of the appeal, the evidence showed that there had been no wilful delay, and that the appellant was in ignorance of the fact of the reasons of appeal not having been filed. Held, reversing the decree of the Sudder Court, that such circumstances constituted a case of "unavoidable accident" within the meaning of Act XVI of 1845, and the appeal was ordered to be re-admitted on the file of pending causes. In reversing the decree of the Sudder Court, the order of that Court that the costs of the application to re-admit the appeal should be paid by the appellants, was confirmed; but as the appellants were successful in obtaining a reversal of the decree of the Court below, the costs of the appeal in England against such decree were ordered to be paid by the respondents. *ANUNDMOYEE DOSSETT v. 85. ———— Circumstances not raised in the lower Court.—Pleadings.—In this case there were concurrent findings of facts both by the lower Court and the High Court, but it was sought to distinguish the case against two of the defendants on the ground of special circumstances connected with their holding. These circumstances were never relied upon in the pleadings, no issue was directed as to them, and there was no proper examination of the case with respect to them. Held that the High Court was justified in refusing to allow the appellant to raise the point. NAM NARAIN SINGH v. 86. ———— Objection as to validity of deeds.—A plaintiff sued to set aside certain documents which he alleged to have been forged by the defendant. At the trial of the case in the Court of first instance the only issue directed to these documents was—“Are the three written agreements said to have been given by the plaintiff to the defendant genuine and valid deeds?” It was not contended by the plaintiff in that Court that the agreements had been obtained from him while he was a minor by undue influence, nor was that objection taken in the grounds of appeal against the judgment of the Court. Held that it was too late to take the objection for the first time in the Court of Appeal. AMREBOONISSA KHATOON v. 98. ———— *Consideration of vide voce evidence.*—Considering the advantages which the Judges in India generally possess of forming a correct opinion of the probability of a transaction and in some cases of the credit due to the witnesses, the fact that the Courts below have decided against the validity of an instrument affords a strong presumption of the correctness of their decisions, but does not and ought not to relieve the Privy Council, as the Court of last resort, from the duty of examining the whole evidence, and forming for itself an opinion upon the whole case. With reference to the lamentable disregard of truth prevailing amongst the natives of India, the Privy Council held that it would be very dangerous for the Court altogether to discredit witnesses deposing vide voce by reason of the necessity imposed on the Court to sift the evidence of such witnesses with great minuteness and care. *MODHOOSOODUN SANDIAL v. 100. ———— Erroneous conclusions from evidence.—Semble.—The Privy Council will not disturb a judgment of a Court in India upon a question of the credibility of witnesses, unless it is manifestly clear from the probabilities attached to certain circumstances in the case that the Court below was wrong in the conclusion drawn from such evidence. *MUSADDEH MAHOMED CAZUM SHREAZEE v. 102. ——— Judgment on facts—Appeals from Non-Regulation Provinces.—In cases from Non-Regulation Provinces, wherein the procedure is somewhat loose, and where the merits depend much on local custom and local inquiry, it is even more necessary than it is on appeals from the Civil Courts in the Regulation Provinces to act on the principle of not disturbing the judgment under appeal, unless it is substantially wrong. *HYDER HOSSEIN v. The case came before the High Court on special appeal, and the decision then given was appealed to England, and special leave was given by Her Majesty to appeal against the decision of the Principal Sudder Ameen. sioner from a decree given on first appeal by an Appellate Court, and maintaining a finding of fact by the original Court, the only questions were (1) whether secondary evidence had been properly admitted on a case that had arisen for its admission; and (2) whether the evidence offered constituted secondary evidence of the matter in dispute, which was the making of a document. Held that (no special leave to appeal from the judgment of the Commissioner, the first Appellate Court, having been applied for) the facts were not open to decision on this appeal; this Committee could only do what the Judicial Commissioner on second appeal, under the above sections, could have done; and that, as the case stood, they were bound by the findings of facts of the first Appellate Court. *LUCHMAN SINGH v. It was decided in the Appellate Court that, even if this deed had been executed, it was inoperative, and on this point the decision of the first Court was maintained. The record of another proceeding would, it was said, have supplied this evidence; and an application had been previously made on which the order of the Judge was that "the matter would be decided when the case was tried, and the record would be sent for, if necessary." No further application to the Court was made, and no attempt to supply this evidence. Held that, if there had been, as there might have been, an oversight by the party in not calling the attention of the Judge to the above order, and in not tendering the evidence, there had been no omission on the Judge's part affording ground for appeal, and the Judicial Committee refused to interfere. *CHANDICHURN SHASHMAL v. 127. ————— Question as to disputed adoption—Reversal of concurrent Courts on fact.—In a suit which involved a disputed question of fact as to an alleged adoption and the due execution of a will, the Courts in India, disregarding other evidence, relied solely upon the evidence of a witness examined at the instance of the first Court itself. The effect of the evidence of this witness was to show that, at the time of the adoption and execution of the will, the alleged testator was in a dying state, and although at times roused to consciousness, was, from his enfeebled mind, incapable of understanding the acts he was represented to have performed; the Courts below, however, on the evidence of this witness as to his testamentary capacity, corroborated, as they thought, by a letter of the widow of the alleged testator recognising the adoption, and by her acquiescing in the performance of certain funeral rights of her deceased husband by the supposed adopted son, pronounced both the adoption and the will to be valid. Upon appeal, held that, although, as a general rule in a question of fact, the Judicial Committee were unwilling to disturb the judgment of the Court below, yet that, as it was the duty of the Appellate Court to weigh the evidence and probabilities, and form an independent judgment, and taking into consideration the evidence regarding the state and capacity of the alleged adopter and testator, they were of opinion that the evidence relied upon was so unsatisfactory that neither of the decrees of the Courts below could be supported, and reversed the same with costs. *TATAMMAUL v. deposition of material witnesses, disturb the decision of the Court below. TORAB ALLY v. MAHOMED TUKKEE

180. — Question as to evidence of custom—Question of fact.—It having been alleged that an estate, by custom, descended to a single heir in the male line, the High Court, concurring with the Court of first instance, found that this custom had not been proved to prevail in the family. On an appeal contesting this finding, it was argued, among other objections, that the High Court had not given sufficient effect to an entry in the wajib-ul urz of a samindari village, the principal one comprised in the family estate now in dispute; the last owner of that estate, who held all the shares in the village, having caused an entry to be made to the effect that his eldest son should be his sole heir, the others of the family being maintained. The appeal was not taken out of the rule as to the concurrent findings of two Courts, primary and appellate, on a question of fact. MUHAMMAD ISMAIL KHAN v. FIDAYAT-UN-NISSA

181. — Wajib-ul-urz—Concurrent findings of Courts below.—A custom of inheritance was alleged to prevail in an Oudh clan that, if the branch of a family became extinct, the other branches of it should take the estate amongst them in equal shares without regard to their degrees in kinship to the deceased. This custom was found not proved by the Original and Appellate Courts upon evidence of instances of succession in kindred families and of rights recorded in certain wajib-ul-urz. If there had been any principle of evidence not properly applied, or documentary evidence had been referred to, on which it could be shown that the Courts below had been led into error, the case might have been re-examined on this appeal, but in the absence of such ground this could not be done. THAKUR HARIHAR BAKSH v. 182. — Agreement for division of family property in equal shares.—Two Courts in concurrence found that there had been an agreement between two parties, interested in a family fund, that it should be divided into equal four parts among the four branches of the family, but that an unequal division, made under a decree, had resulted from unfair dealing. To contest upon this appeal those findings of fact, nothing was stated to make it appear to the Committee that, if they went through the whole of the evidence, they would differ from the Courts below on anything but questions of pure fact. Accordingly, their Lordships were of opinion that the case fell within the rule which makes appellate tribunals reluctant to interfere, and in most cases makes them refuse to interfere, with concurrent findings of the Courts below. KRISHNAN v. 20. CONCURRENT JUDGMENTS ON FACTS
—continued.

183. — Findings of fact—Concurrent findings by two Courts.—The usual course of not disturbing concurrent findings of fact may be followed, notwithstanding that a part of the evidence in the suit has not been considered by the lower Court, when both Courts have arrived at the same result. In this case, however, the whole of the evidence having been brought to their notice, the Judicial Committee expressed their opinion that the Appellate Court below could not have decided otherwise than as it had decided. RAM LAL v. MEHDI HUSAIN

I. R., 17 I. A., 70]

184. — Necessity of there being gift and acceptance of the adopted child.—Hindu Law—Adoption.—The Court of first instance and the Appellate Court, after observing fully upon the evidence, found that, although a ceremony of adoption had taken place, there had not in fact been a giving and taking of the child. There being no reason for departing from the ordinary course, where two Courts have concurred, the above finding was accepted; and it was thereupon held that there had been no adoption. BIRSWAR MUKERJI v. I. R., 20 I. A., 38

186. — Inferences of fact—Concurrent findings by two Courts below, not influenced by precisely the same considerations, upon the same evidence.—It cannot detract from the weight of concurrent findings of fact that different Courts, arriving at the same result upon the same evidence, have not been influenced by precisely the same considerations; a difference of opinion to that extent is only calculated to suggest that the evidence, whatever view be taken of it, necessarily leads to one and the same inference. NILMONI SINGH DEO v. KIRTI CHUNDER CHOWDHRY

187. — Findings of fact on documentary evidence apart from construction.—Against a claim for the proprietary right by inheritance brought by the nearest bandhu or cognate heir of the deceased, the defendant in possession set up his adoption by the widow under her husband's authority. The Courts below had found that no such authority had been given, and that the widow, not adopting to her husband, had adopted the defendant as her son. The Courts below had also concurred in finding against the fact of a dattaka adoption having taken place, which would have had the effect of removing one of the plaintiff's ancestors into another family, whereby a necessary link in the succession would have been lost to the plaintiff's title had this adoption been proved. As a ground for interference with these findings of fact, it was suggested that the evidence consisted, in a great measure, of documents of which the construction had been matter for decision, thus rendering the questions to be other than of fact, but it was held that they turned on the effect of the evidence afforded by the documents, and not on the construction, so that there was no reason for departing from the ordinary rule as to the concurrence of two Courts upon fact. LACHMAN LAL CHOWDHRI v. KANHAYA LAL MOWAR. I. L. R., 22 Calc., 609 [L. R., 22 I. A., 51]

138. — — — Effect of reception in evidence on appeal of documents rejected by first Court.—The merits of a claim depended upon the authenticity of an anumati-patro (deed of permission to adopt) alleged to have been given to a widow by her husband. The first Court found that the instrument was not genuine. The High Court, on appeal, upheld this finding, but had considered relevant, and admitted in evidence, documents rejected by the first Court when tendered by the appellants. This reception of evidence afforded no reason for making the case an exception to the application of the rule, in the discretion of the Committee, against the disturbance of concurrent decisions upon a fact in issue below. HURRI BHUSAN MUKERJI v. UPENDRA LAL MUKERJI [I. L. R., 24 Calc., 1] L. R., 23 I. A., 97

139. — — — Want of legal necessity—Hindu Law—Alienation by one of two co-widows.—Two widows of the same husband, each having inherited her undivided share in the inheritance, disputed as to their rights therein. They then settled their dispute by a compromise, in which it was agreed that each had obtained absolute proprietary right in her share as a co-widow, and that division had been made between them. Having no power by this to affect the rights of the successor to the estate on their deaths, each was entitled to her share for her widow's estate only. Upon a mortgage made by the elder widow before her death, the mortgagee now claimed not only the interests of both the widows and thus to deprive the younger who had survived the other of her interests during her life, but also claimed a charge on the estate of inheritance in the land mortgaged. Against the competency of the elder widow to charge the estate of both and to bind the reversioner, both Courts below had decided. They had found that there had been no justifying necessity established by the evidence for the mortgage. These concurrent findings having been accepted by the Judicial Committee as correct in regard to the absence of necessity for the mortgage, they saw no occasion to say anything about any other questions as to the competency of the elder widow to mortgage the whole estate in the way in which she did. DHARAM CHAND LAL v. 21. RE-HEARING.

140. — — — Grounds for re-hearing.—An order passed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council after hearing an appeal is final; and an application for a re-hearing will not be granted except upon the ground that the applicant has, by some accident, without blame or default on his own part, not been heard, and the order has inadvertently been made as if he had been heard. IN THE MATTER OF THE APPEAL OF PERTAB NARAIN SINGH v. [I. L. R., 4 Calc., 184; L. R., 5 I. A., 171]

141. — — — Irregularity in trial.—An irregularity in a trial is no ground of complaint to the party at whose instance it was caused. The suspicion that a party who has failed to prove his case may prove more successful on a second and fuller investigation is no sufficient ground for directing a new trial. NITRASUR SINGH v. NURD LALL SINGH

[1 W. R., P. C., 51; 8 Moore's I. A., 199]

142. — — — Laches of petitioner.—There were four respondents in an appeal to the Privy Council. At the hearing, the appeal was allowed ex-parte against all the respondents. One respondent afterwards petitioned for a re-hearing, on the ground that neither he nor his agents had notice that the appeal had been entered or fixed for hearing until after it had been decided. On inquiry, it appeared that the petitioner had inaccurately described the suit to his agents as an appeal against himself only, without mentioning the names of the other respondents; and the agents, on being told at the Privy Council office that no appeal so entitled was pending, had taken no further steps. Held that there had been omission and neglect on the petitioner's part and on the part of his agents such as to prevent the Judicial Committee from recommending a re-hearing of the case. SWARNAMAYI v. 143. — — — Party accidentally prevented from being heard.—In a petition for re-hearing of two appeals which had been fully heard upon their merits, and in which judgment had been given and reported to Her Majesty, and confirmed by regular orders in Council.—Held that, assuming a relevant case of new matter had been made out, the decision was final, and the petition must be refused. There may be exceptional circumstances which will warrant this Board, even after an order of Her Majesty in Council has been made, in allowing a re-hearing at the instance of one of the parties; but this is an indulgence with a view mainly to doing justice when by some accident, without blame, the party has not been heard, and an order has been made inadvertently as if the party had been heard. Rajinder Narain Rao v. [L. R., 13 I. A., 155; I. L. R., 10 Mad., 73]

144. ———— Alleged want of notice to respondent—Appeal heard ex-parte.—There is no rule, among those made by the High Court under the authority of law, that the respondent in an appeal to the Queen in Council shall receive formal notice of the transmission of the record of the appeal, of the pendency whereof he has had notice. The mere allegation that the respondents in this appeal had, in consequence of their having had no express notice that the appeal had been set down for hearing, allowed the hearing of the appeal to take place ex-parte was not considered sufficient to entitle them to a re-hearing thereof. LALTA PRASAD v. AZIZ-UD-DIN. I. L. R., 19 All., 209 [L. R., 24 I. A., 49]

145. ———— Infancy of party at the time of the hearing of appeal—"Res noriter."—There may be exceptional circumstances which will warrant the Judicial Committee in allowing, even after an order of Her Majesty in Council has issued upon their report, a re-hearing at the instance of one of the parties. But this is an indulgence with a view mainly to doing justice when by some accident, without any blame, the party has not been heard, and an order has been made, inadvertently as if he had been heard. In one of two appeals in suits relating to the same estate, judgment was given by the Judicial Committee after a hearing on the merits. In the other judgment was given to the same effect as in the first, it being conceded between the parties that the questions in both suits were the same. After both judgments had been reported to Her Majesty and confirmed by her orders in Council, a petition for a re-hearing was presented. Held that, even assuming that a case of res noriter had been made out (which was not, however, the fact), the orders were final, and the petition must be rejected. *IN RE APPA RAO. 23. ENFORCING EXECUTION OF ORDER.

148. ———— Application to enforce execution of order—Order for possession—Issue of peremptory order of enforcement.—Where the Court in India, having decided a suit for land in favour of A, put him into possession of the estate without taking security as required by Madras Regulation VIII of 1818, s. 4, and on appeal by B the decision was reversed and B ordered to be put in possession, and in the meantime the Madras Board of Revenue had got into possession as purchasers of a portion of the estate at a sale for arrears of its revenue, and the Court in India refused to carry into execution the order of the Privy Council, the Judicial Committee, on the application of B, issued a peremptory order to the Madras Court to carry it into execution and put B into possession. IN RE VASSAREDDY LUTCHMEPUTTY NAIDOO

24. COSTS.

149. ———— Discretion as to costs—Appeal—Bom. Reg. II of 1800, s. 7.—When a discretion is vested in a Court as to costs, the Privy Council will not allow any appeal against the exercise of that discretion, because no appeal lies against a mere decree as to costs. But when a Court has no discretion to exercise in the matter (as when a suit was instituted by parties who had no right to institute it, as the person in whose name and on whose behalf they instituted it was dead at the time), costs must follow the decree according to s. 7, Regulation II of 1800 of the Bombay Code. *KREKKER BAEH v. 150. ———— Improper admission of evidence—Penalty on parties to appeal.—The Privy Council, whilst lamenting the great latitude with which documentary evidence was received in India, held that it would be contrary to justice in any particular case to visit upon an individual penal consequences by way of costs, because the administration of justice was not more strictly conducted with reference to the admission of evidence. *BUNWARREE LALL v. 153. ——— Delay in suing—Disallowance of costs.—Case in which the Privy Council affirmed the decision of the Sudder Court; but as there had been delay in suing, and as the case was attended with a considerable degree of suspicion, refused to the respondent before it all costs, and decreed further that the cost of the appeal to the Sudder Court should be disallowed. ULBUK SINGH v. BENY PERSAD . 5 W. R., P. C., 77

154. ——— Delay in appealing by which costs were incurred—Set-off of costs.—Where, in a suit to have accounts re opened, the Court at Calcutta found that the accounts ought to be opened, and referred the suit to the master, and the defendant did not appeal at once from this interlocutory order, but proceeded in the master's office in respect of the matters included in the accounts, but before the general report was made by the master he appealed to England from such interlocutory decree,—the Judicial Committee, in reversing the decree, ordered him to pay the costs of the proceedings in the master's office and remitted the cause to the Court below, with directions that the costs payable to the defendant on the dismissal of the bill, and the costs payable by him consequent on his proceedings in the master's office, should be set off one against the other, and the balance paid to the party entitled to the same. *McKELLAR v. 156. ——— Leave to appeal granted on condition that appellant paid respondents' costs if directed to do so—Costs given at hearing against respondents.—Special leave to appeal had been granted on terms that the appellant should be liable to pay the respondents' costs in any event, if directed so to do. entitled to claim that this possession was held partly for him. The present suit was brought upon two agreements, purporting to have been made in 1870, between the two co-sharers, while proceedings to obtain the above decrees were pending, to the effect that, whereas both had claims against the talukhdar, one only was to sue him, the other paying half of the costs and being entitled to receive half of what might be decreed. The Judicial Committee upon the evidence concluded that the Appellate Court, attributing too much to certain omissions and acts on the plaintiff's part which were more or less explained, had erred in reversing the decree of the first Court, which maintained the agreements, depriving the plaintiff of his costs in that Court only. *MUHAMMAD YUSUF v. 159. ——— Misstatement in petition.—Where special leave to appeal to the Privy Council is granted upon a petition in which material misstatements are made, objection should be taken by the respondent by preliminary motion to rescind the leave to appeal, or at any rate before the hearing of the appeal, when called on, has been entered on. Where it was not clear that the material misstatements in the petition had been made with an intention to deceive, and the objection to the appeal was only taken at a late stage of the hearing, the Judicial Committee declined to dismiss the appeal, but refused the appellant the costs of the appeal. *RAM SABUK BOSE v. Even if there has been no intention to mislead, a material misstatement having been made, the order is still liable to be rescinded; and to maintain it to clear the case of bad faith is not sufficient. Mohan Lal Sukul v. Bebee Dass, 8 Moore's I. A., 193, referred to and followed. Of three grounds on which special leave to appeal had been obtained, two had been correctly stated, but with the third was connected an error in the petition to which objection was taken at the hearing. There was no reason to believe that there had been any misdirection by the Judge, or that he had, as he was alleged by the petitioner to have done, misconstrued, in charging the jury, a section of the Penal Code. On appeal there was no view of the signatures, neither party having applied to have the originals transmitted, or to have photographs taken of them. But their Lordships found that the evidence did not warrant the conclusion that on the day on which the will purported to have been executed the testator physically and mentally was unable to execute it; but that there was sufficient evidence to establish the genuineness of the will and the capacity of the testator to make it, and that the evidence for the defence was not sufficient to destroy the petitioner's case on either of these points. *BAMASUNDARI DEBI v. 36. ——— Proof of inofficious will—Knowledge of testator as to nature of his acts in making will.—Where a will is inofficious in character, it is incumbent on the parties propounding it to prove it not only affirmatively, but completely, and by circumstances showing not only that the testator signed the will, but that he knew what he was doing, that he was making a will, and that he did all that he did with his eyes open. *SARODA SOONDUREE DOSSIA v. outcaste state. Held that the applicant, as her husband's sister's son, had no interest in her estate entitling him to maintain the application. The general rule, that the tie of kindred between a woman's natural family and herself ceases when she becomes degraded and an outcaste, applies with even greater force as between her and the members of her husband's family. Those members therefore have no right of inheritance in property acquired by a woman who leaves her husband's family and becomes degraded. IN THE GOODS OF KAMINYMONEY BSWAH. . . I. L. 50. ————— Application to revoke probate—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Right of suit to revoke probate.—A grant of probate of a will is not in the nature of a summary proceeding to be contested by a regular suit in the Civil Court. The grant must be contested by a suit in the Court out of which such grant issued, and it must be contested before the Court sitting as a Court of Probate, and not in the exercise of its ordinary civil jurisdiction. Persons who seek to contest a will must prove an interest to entitle them to a locus standi in Court, but the want of interest is an objection which should be taken at the earliest stage of the proceedings. There is nothing in the Indian Succession Act to deprive a District Court, as a Court of Probate, of jurisdiction to hear and determine an application to revoke grant of probate of a will on the ground of the execution of such will having been obtained by force and coercion. Semble—That a legatee under a will has "an interest" sufficient to maintain a suit for the revocation of probate. *MAYHO v. 54. ——— Application for revocation of probate—Jurisdiction—Interest of applicant in the estate—Reversioner—Special citation—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 235, 244, 250.—The test of jurisdiction made use of in applications for grant of probate may be also applied to cases in which a revocation of probate is demanded, viz., whether or no the deceased, at the time of his death, had his fixed place of abode, or had some property, moveable or immovable, situate within the jurisdiction of the particular District Judge to whom the application is made. A presumptive reversioner to property with which a will deals has a sufficient interest in the property to entitle him to maintain a suit in respect of such property; and on the authority of *Nobeen Chundra Sil v. On caveat entered by D, Held also that he had such an interest as entitled him to oppose the grant. Per FIELD, J.—Under a 242 of the Succession Act, any person who can show that he is entitled to maintain a suit in respect of property over which probate would have effect possesses a sufficient interest to entitle him to enter a caveat and oppose the grant. *IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BHOBOSOONDURI DABEE. 61. — Caveat — Mortgagee—Attaching creditor—Fraud.—A mortgaged certain property to B, who obtained a decree on his mortgage on the 20th of August 1881. In execution of this decree, B, on the 5th of September 1881, attached the mortgaged property and obtained an order for sale. On the 14th of September 1881, the wife of the mortgagor applied for probate of the will of one T D, the mother of the mortgagor, who had died on the 16th of May 1881. The testatrix, by her will, left all her property to the mortgagor's wife. The mortgaged property was included in the property dealt with by the will. B, the mortgagee, entered a caveat against the grant of probate, alleging that the will was a forgery, got up by the mortgagor for the purpose of saving the mortgaged property from being sold in execution of a decree against himself. Held that B was entitled to enter a caveat. *SURBOMONGALA DASSI v. 62. — Interest in testator's estate—Defendant in suit for probate of will — Legatee — Creditor of testator — Proof of former will.—In a suit brought to obtain probate of a will, the defendant, before he can contest the will, must show that he has some interest in the testator's estate. The fact of being a legatee under the will, or a creditor of the testator, does not amount to such an interest. But proof of a former will of the testator in which the defendant is interested is a sufficient interest to contest the will set up. RAHAMTULLAH SAHIB v. RAMA RAU I. L. R., 17 Mad., 378

65. — Probate, Nature and effect of—Act V of 1881, ss. 16 and 60.—S, a Parsi, died, leaving a will, whereby he directed that after his death his estate should be managed by his widow J and after her death by his sister-in-law H, and after H's death by the appellant, his adopted son H N. On J's death, the testator's brother D applied for letters of administration, and issued a citation to the appellant H N. H entered a caveat. No further proceedings were taken, and the matter remained pending. On H's death, D applied for a fresh citation to the appellant H N, but the District Judge held it to be unnecessary and declined to issue it. Letters of administration were then granted to D. The appellant H N subsequently applied for probate of the testator's will. The respondents filed caveats alleging that the will was void, on the ground of certain bequests contained in it, and on this ground the District Judge refused probate of the will. Held that the District Judge was wrong in refusing probate of the will on the ground that the bequests contained in it were illegal and void. Probate is only conclusive as to the appointment of executors and the validity and contents of the will; and in an application for probate it is not the province of the Court to go into the question of title with reference to the property of which the will purports to dispose, or the validity of such disposition. *HORMUSJI NAVROJI v. A obtained probate of the will, and entered upon the properties mentioned therein. Held that the Court had not power, under s. 234 of the Succession Act, to revoke the probate upon the ground that A had, since he took charge of the office, taken to an immoral course of conduct, and in consequence had been excluded from the community of mohunts. The proper course to take for depriving such a person of his office would be to bring a suit under the Religious Endowment Act, or any other suit, for a declaration that he had disqualified himself, and if in that suit a decree was obtained and duly certified to the Court which granted probate, that Court would, no doubt, direct the revocation of the probate. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF MOHUN DASS. 82. ———— Probate as giving right to sue under will—Probate Act (V of 1881), ss. 92, 164—Probate when necessary in cases of Hindu and Mahomedan will—Executor—Act XXVII of 1860—Right of one out of three executors to carry on a suit—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 187—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870).—Previously to the passing of the Probate Act (V of 1881), executors appointed by such wills as fell within the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) acquired the same estate and interest in the property of their deceased testator, with the same restrictions in representing the estate in a Court of justice, as obtained under English law. All the sections of the Succession Act (X of 1865) relating to grants of probate and letters of administration which were formerly incorporated in the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) are now (with the exception of s. 187) removed from that Act by s. 154 of Act V of 1881, but are, with the exception of s. 187, re-enacted verbatim in Act V of 1881. S. 187, however, still remains incorporated by reference with the Hindu Wills Act (see s. 154 of Act V of 1881). The result is that probate is necessary in case of such Hindu wills as fall within the Hindu Wills Act. But the omission from Act V of 1881 (which applies to all Mahomedans and Hindus) of any section corresponding to s. 187 of the Indian Succession Act, and the retention of that section in the Hindu Wills Act, shows that it was the intention of the Legislature that, except in cases falling under the Hindu Wills Act, an executor of any Hindu or Mahomedan will may establish his right in a Court of justice without taking out probate. In cases, however, falling within the provisions of Act XXVII of 1860, debtors have still the right (under s. 2 of that Act) of insisting upon a plaintiff executor taking out probate. Where A, one of three executors of a Mahomedan will, none of whom had taken out probate, desired to carry on a suit originally instituted by their testator to recover a share of an estate, all the other parties to the suit being desirous that the suit should be dismissed,—Held that A, under s. 92 of the Probate Act (V of 1881), being only one of three executors, could not carry on the suit without first taking out probate of the testator's will. Held further that A, being an executor, had a right to carry on the suit and get in the assets of his testator in order to meet possible claims on the estate. The other parties to the suit who were beneficially interested in the estate, and who desired that the suit should terminate, had the remedy in their hands by putting the executor in funds to discharge the debts. *MOOSA c. 87. ——— Hindu will made outside Bombay relating to property situate partly within and partly outside Bombay—Will—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870)—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 179—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 4—Probate of such will, Effect of—Representation of the estate—Parties to suit.—One L died at Surat in 1878 possessed of ancestral property situate partly in Bombay and partly in Surat district. He left a widow B, and a minor son M. At his death he made a will bequeathing his property to his son, and appointing certain executors to manage the property during the son's minority. The son died in 1877, leaving a minor widow, M G. In 1879 one of the executors obtained probate of L's will from the High Court. In 1884 a suit was filed, on behalf of the minor M G, against her mother-in-law B to recover possession of the property covered by the will of L. One of the defences to this suit was that the property in dispute had vested in the executor, who had obtained probate of the will, and that, as the defendant held the estate under the executor, the suit was not maintainable without impleading the executor. Held that the executor was not a necessary party to the suit. S. 179 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) as incorporated into the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) did not apply so far as it related to property outside Bombay. The property in dispute was situate in the Surat district. It was joint ancestral property. On the father's death, it vested in the son by survivorship, and on the son's death it vested in the son's widow, the plaintiff, in the present suit. Under the provisions, therefore, of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 4 (if that Act can be held to operate at all in the mofussil before a notification is issued under s. 2), the estate could not vest in the executor, as it had passed by survivorship to another person long before the Act came into operation. *BAI HARKOR c. ss. 18 to 23, 37, 44, 45, 46, 83 and 86—Debutter property, Administration in respect of—Idol—“Beneficiary”—Trustee with power of appointment—Administration, Grant of letters of, to idol's property where probate has been previously granted of will dedicating the property.—A testatrix by her will dedicated certain immovable property to the sheba of an idol, and appointed an executrix, whom she also constituted shebait, and to whom she gave power to appoint the next shebait. The executrix died without having made any such appointment, and thereupon an application was made by the sister's son of the testatrix for letters of administration, with a copy of the will annexed, to be granted to him with respect to the debutter property. Held that s. 45 of the Probate and Administration Act authorized such a grant to be made, inasmuch as, no shebait having been appointed, there still remained some portion of the estate of the testatrix to be administered. Held also that the idol, being the castui que trust, was a “beneficiary” within the meaning of that term as used in s. 37 of the Act, and that, as it could not undertake the management of the estate, under that section administration might be granted to some person on its behalf. Held further that the applicant, the sister's son of the testatrix, being the heir in the absence of other nearer heirs, as such was entitled to letters of administration, as the original grant in respect of the debutter property might have been made to him. *RANJIT SING v. 2. Sanction to prosecute, without finding if omission to file accounts is intentional or accounts intentionally false—Jurisdiction of District Judge to call for accounts after revocation of probate.—N was executor to an estate. The probate was revoked. He had not filed an account during his executorship. After the revocation of the probate, he was ordered to submit accounts. He failed to do so within the time appointed. Sanction was given to prosecute him under s. 98, cl. (c), of Act V of 1881. The accounts were subsequently filed, whereupon the Court kept the order in abeyance, but after examination of the accounts and suspecting its genuineness, the Court restored the sanction for prosecution. Held that the Judge was not right in making the order depend on the examination of the accounts themselves, and that the Judge ought not to have made an order sanctioning the prosecution under s. 176 without an enquiry whether the omission to produce the accounts was intentional, or the accounts filed were intentionally false. NABA CHANDRA CHOWDHURY v. Plaintiffs must, on the presentation of their plaints, produce in Court the originals of the document relied on by them in support of their claim. When a plaintiff can satisfy the Court at the hearing that some document on which he desires to rely was not presented with the plaint, because he was ignorant of its existence at the time, the Court will probably allow it to be received as evidence. *CAMPBELL v. Annexed to it was a copy of an extract from the plaintiff's account books. The matter was adjourned to the 2nd June 1897 for the production of the account books, in order that the copy might be compared and verified. On that day neither the plaintiff nor his pleader appeared with the books, whereupon the Subordinate Judge rejected the plaint, holding that no summons could be issued unless the copy extract annexed to the plaint was found to be correct. Held (reversing the order) that, the plaint having been registered on the 14th April, summonses ought to have been issued on the 2nd June. There was no provision in the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) justifying the rejection of the plaint. The penalty which the plaintiff incurred for not producing his original accounts was that prescribed in s. 63, viz., not being able to put in that account without the special leave of the Judge. *GOPAL GUNDAPA NAIK v. But this statement was disbelieved, and the Court fined him Rs 75, under s. 174 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). Held that the fine was illegally levied. The jurisdiction of the Court to punish under s. 174 of the Civil Procedure Code exists only in the case of a witness, who, not having attended on summons, has been arrested and brought before the Court. The case of a witness who having a document will not produce it is provided for by s. 175 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) and s. 480 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). IN RE PREMCHAND DOWLATRAM

4. ——— Uncertain agreement.—Held that the following instrument was so vague and indefinite in its terms that it could not be regarded as a promissory note: "I, J M C, do hereby promise to pay at Allahabad to the Manager of the Agra Savings Bank, Limited, the sum of Rs10 on or

5. ——— Promissory note payable to "bearer on demand"—Note payable whenever
'dhani' (i.e. the owner) may demand—Dhani not equivalent to "bearer"—Not a negotiable instrument—Paper Currency Act (XX of 1882), s. 25—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 4 and 13.—The plaintiffs brought a suit on an alleged promissory note of the defendants for Rs2,125. The note was in Gujarati, in the form of an account, on a loose sheet of paper. After reciting that the defendant had borrowed the said sum of Rs2,125 on personal security, and that interest was to run thereon at a specified rate, the document continued as follows:
"The same (i.e., the sum borrowed with interest) are payable whenever dhani (the owner or lender) may demand payment thereof." The defendant contended that the note in question was in form one payable to "bearer on demand," and as such illegal and void, as being in contravention of the provisions of s. 25 of the Paper Currency Act (XX of 1882). Held that dhani was not in the ordinary or the commercial language of the Bombay Presidency equivalent to "bearer" in the sense that word was employed in the Paper Currency and Negotiable Instruments Acts, and that the document in question was not therefore a negotiable instrument, nor obnoxious to the provisions of the former Act, and there was no objection to a suit founded upon
it. JETHA PARKHA v. RAMCHANDRA VITHOBA

addressee to pay the amount to the bearer of the letter, and continuing, "this sum I shall repay with interest . . . and get back this letter: I request you will not neglect to pay the amount on the strength of this letter," is a promissory note and not a mere proposal for a loan. CHANNAMMA v.

3. CONSIDERATION.

11. ——— Note given in payment of loss on wagering contract—Act XXI of 1848
—Bom. Act III of 1865.—A promissory note which has for its consideration a debt due on a wagering contract is not binding in the hands of the original payee. TRIKAM DAMODHAR v. LALA AMIRCHAND
[8 Bom., A. C., 131]

12. ——— Note given partly for "balance of bets and lotteries"—Lottery Act (V of 1844).—The defendant agreed with the plaintiff to take the plaintiff's mare "Bridesmaid" on "racing terms,"—all winnings to be divided equally between them, and the plaintiff to have the option of claiming a one-fourth share of any lottery in which she might be bought by or on account of the defendant; the plaintiff to keep and train "Bridesmaid" for ₹60 a month. Subsequently, the plaintiff agreed to keep and train, for a like sum for each horse, five horses belonging to the defendant. The defendant having been posted as a defaulter, the plaintiff, at the defendant's request, advanced certain sums to the Secretary of the Calcutta Races to enable the defendant's horses to run. As security for the repayment of such advances, and of a sum of ₹4,456-8 which had become due to the plaintiff, and which included an item of ₹1,149 for "balance of bets and lotteries," and a smaller sum in respect of certain tickets in the "Secundra Raffle," the defendant gave to the plaintiff a letter of hypothecation of his five horses, whereby it was agreed that in case of the defendant's default the plaintiff should be at liberty to sell the horses. The defendant made default, and the plaintiff advertised the horses for sale. On the same day the defendant wrote and gave to the plaintiff a letter, stating that, in consideration of the plaintiff's withdrawing the advertisement, and withholding the sale for a certain period, he would give the plaintiff a promissory note for the balance of his claim. A note for ₹7,000 was accordingly given by the defendant to the plaintiff. In the account delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant, he had by mistake overcredited the defendant with ₹744 in an item headed "cash received from the Secretary of the Calcutta Races, balance of racing account," and under which was included the following item: "I. O. U., deducted from lottery account, ₹480." On receiving information of the error, the defendant gave the plaintiff another promissory note for ₹744. In an action on the notes brought under Act V of 1866, the plaintiff obtained a decree, which was set aside on the defendant's application, and leave was given to him to appear and defend. Written statements were then filed on the plaintiff's application. Held by MACPHERSON, J., that the two promissory notes were given as security for the whole of the plaintiff's claim; that the items for "balance of bets and lotteries" and for the "Secundra Raffle" being rendered illegal by the Lottery Act (V of 1844), part of the consideration for the notes was illegal, and no action was maintainable upon them. His Lordship therefore dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal, held by COUCH, C.J., that the promissory note for ₹7,000 was not vitiated by the ₹1,149 being part of the consideration for it: although that portion of the latter sum which was won by lotteries was obtained by an illegal transaction, it was not illegal for the defendant to receive the money, and, having done so, to pay the plaintiff his share or to promise to do so. But the money paid in respect of the "Secundra Raffle," being money paid in execution of an illegal purpose, was an illegal consideration which disentitled the plaintiff to recover on the note. Held further that the note for ₹744 was given upon good consideration. All the facts of the case being stated in the plaintiff's written statement, the Court might allow the plaintiff to be amended, and frame an issue as to what amount was due to the plaintiff in respect of the consideration for the note for ₹7,000. Held by MARKBY, J., that both notes were good, inasmuch as the promise contained in them did not spring from, nor was it the creature of, the original illegal agreement, but was a separate agreement. JOSEPH v. SOLANO

2 C. W. N., 286

17. ——— Suit by endorsee against maker—Endorsement of overdue note.—In a suit by endorsee against the maker of a promissory note payable on demand, the defence was that there were dealings in skins between the defendant and the payee, and an agreement was made by which the payee was to pay the defendant Rs. 4,500 as an advance upon goods to be supplied by the defendant to the payee; that the money was paid, and the promissory note sued on was made and delivered as an acknowledgment of the receipt of the money and as a security for what should be due to the maker in respect of the dealings. The defendant stated that the state of the accounts between him and the maker showed a balance in favour of the defendant, and notice to the plaintiff of these facts was alleged. The note was endorsed to the plaintiff two years and eleven months after date. Held that, although the evidence failed to make out notice to the plaintiff, the note when endorsed was an overdue note, and that the plaintiff took it subject to the then state of the accounts between the payee and the defendant. COMMUNDUN MOHIDEEN SAIB v. 18. ——— Endorsement of note overdue—Note on demand—Re-endorsement.—Before a promissory note on demand can be treated as overdue in the hands of an endorsee, there must be some evidence of demand. Saib, 7 Mad., 275, followed. In 1884 S by an agreement in writing assigned all her property, including the promissory note, to M, but did not endorse over the promissory note to M. The note had not been endorsed until after the bank had been wound up and had ceased to exist, and the endorsement had been held to be invalid. Held that plaintiffs were entitled to sue for the original debt, even though they were not entitled to sue on the promissory note. Pothi Reddi v. Promissory notes made by an agent, acting for himself and for his principal, were secured by the deposit of title-deeds of property, belonging to the principal, in the hands of a bank which discounted the notes, and the latter were paid at maturity by an endorser. Held that the endorser was entitled to a transfer of the deeds to him as security, without further assent from the owner. Held also that he was entitled to have them transferred to him on the ground that, as a fact, the agent, acting within the principal's authority, had agreed that, in consideration of his paying the amount of the notes to the holder, he should have this security, the bank assenting. *AGA AHMED ISPAHANI v. 25. ——— Effect of an invalid endorsement of a promissory note by payee—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 46—Note recovered by, but not re-indorsed to, the payee.—The defendant gave plaintiff a promissory note payable on demand. The plaintiff endorsed the note to a third party, a creditor of his, who sued the defendant on the note on his refusal to pay. The defendant pleaded that it had been agreed between the payee and himself that the note should not take effect until the payee had performed certain conditions which remained unperformed. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The plaintiff thereupon paid the endorsee and took back the note, which, however, was not re-indorsed, and instituted the present suit against the defendant, who pleaded that the property in the note was not vested in the original plaintiff so as to enable him to maintain the suit. On the decease of the plaintiff before the trial, his sons were substituted as plaintiffs. Held that, although the property in a promissory note payable to order on demand passes by endorsement and delivery (Act XXVI of 1881, s. 46), the endorsement in this case had been declared invalid in the suit referred to, and must therefore be treated as cancelled, and consequently the property in the note was vested in the plaintiff at the

27. ——— Contemporaneous collateral agreement consistent with the terms of the promissory note—Right of suit under Ch. XXXIX, Civil Procedure Code.—The plaintiffs advanced money to defendant for the supply of certain goods. On defendant's failure to supply the goods, plaintiffs pressed for repayment, and a promissory note payable on demand for the amount due was executed; at the same time an agreement was entered into by defendant to liquidate the amount due on the promissory note by fortnightly consignments, the consignment to be made within fourteen days of the date of the promissory note. On defendant's failure to send the consignments as promised, a suit was brought under Ch. XXXIX, Civil Procedure Code. Held that the suit was rightly filed under Ch. XXXIX; that the agreement to liquidate the amount due by fortnightly consignments was a collateral undertaking consistent with the existence of the note containing an absolute promise to pay; that such collateral agreement was no answer to the suit on the promissory note; and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. *SIMON v. 28. ——— Promissory note by member of an undivided Hindu family—Liability of other member—Negotiable Instruments Act (Act XXVI of 1881), ss. 4, 26, 27.—The maker of a promissory note (executed in plaintiff's favour), being a member of an undivided Hindu family, had borrowed from plaintiff the money represented by the note and purchased therewith land for the benefit of the family, which consisted of himself (the maker of note), an uncle, and the sons of the uncle. The uncle had always recognized the debt as a family debt, and the land purchased with the money borrowed had, in a subsequent division of property, been allotted to the uncle and his sons, who had also agreed with the maker of the note that they would discharge the debt. On a suit being brought against the maker of the note, as well as the uncle and his sons, —Held (per SHYPHARD and SUBRAHMANYA AYYAR, JJ. (DAVIES, J., dissenting), that all the members of the undivided family were liable. Per SUBRAHMANYA AYYAR, J.—Even assuming that the maker of the note was not the manager of the family, he was the agent of his co-parceners when buying the land and raising the loan, and his acts as such agent bound the uncle who expressly assented to them;

also that, inasmuch as the uncle was liable, his sons must be also held liable for the debt to the extent to which they were interested in the family property, and that even if they were minors when the money was borrowed. Whether, having regard to ss. 233 and 234 of the Indian Contract Act, a principal cannot be proceeded against upon a negotiable instrument executed by an agent in his own name—Quere. Per DAVIES, J.—(1) Had the suit been brought on a bond, or on the debt of which the promissory note afforded evidence, other members of the family might have been held liable as well as the maker of the note, on the ground that the latter represented them. But in the case of a suit on a promissory note (as this suit was) no such representation could be alleged unless the persons said to be represented appeared by name on the face of the document; (2) where the name of only one person appears on a promissory note and he does not purport to make it on behalf of any one but himself, none but the maker can be held liable to discharge it. *KRISHNA AYYAR v. The penalty prescribed by s. 11, Act XIV of 1868, for disobedience of any of its rules is for a "woman who voluntarily registers herself as a common prostitute." A Magistrate has authority to hear any objection urged by a woman charged with disobedience of the rules under Act XIV of 1868 against the legality of her registry, or that she is not a common prostitute. Where a woman is prosecuted before a Magistrate under s. 11 of Act XIV of 1868, she is not precluded from pleading that she has ceased to be a common prostitute, and that she has taken steps, under s. 21 and the rules framed thereunder, for the removal of her name from the register; and the Magistrate is competent to entertain such a defence. The words "in respect of sales in execution of decrees" in s. 19 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 do not include any proceedings instituted after the sale for setting it aside. Ss. 311 and 312 therefore of the Civil Procedure Code do not apply to sales under a certificate. The infringement of the provisions of s. 290 of the Civil Procedure Code is not a mere irregularity, but vitiates the sale. Bakshi Nand Kishore v. Malak Chand, I. L. R., 7 All., 289. certificate issued under Bengal Act VII of 1880, and who has sustained substantial injury by reason of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, is by way of an appeal under s. 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868. The effect of s. 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 is that Act XI of 1859, and Bengal Act VII of 1868, and Bengal Act VII of 1880, are to be considered as if the provisions contained in them were contained in one Act so far as such construction is consistent with the tenor of the last-mentioned Act. By the force therefore of s. 2 of the Act of 1880, the provisions of s. 2 of the Act of 1868 became applicable to a sale under an execution issued upon a certificate made under the Act of 1880. Bengal Act VII of 1880 is an Act for the recovery of all kinds of public demands, and therefore applies to cases of road or other public cesses. SADHUSARAN SINGH v. PANCHDEO LAL. I. L. must be issued by the Collector in whose office the

that s. 8 of Act VII of 1868, read with s. 2 of the said Act, makes a certificate of sale conclusive evidence that all notices have been duly served and posted in the case of a sale under Bengal Act VII of 1880 as well, the question when the notice was served would still remain open. The certificate of sale, moreover, cannot be conclusive evidence that the

which lays down that a Collector "in the discharge

— Notice of suit—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 424—Talukhdari settlement officer managing estate under Act XXI of 1881—Broach and Kaira Encumbered Estates Act.—The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to succeed, on his father's death, to a talukhdari estate to the exclusion of defendant 1, who, he alleged, was a supposititious child set up by his step-mother to defeat the plaintiff's right of inheritance. It appeared that defendant 1 had obtained a decree against the plaintiff's father establishing his legitimacy and declaring him entitled to receive maintenance out of the estate in question. In accordance with that decree, the talukhdari settlement officer (defendant 2), who was manager of the estates under the Broach and Kaira Encumbered Estates Act (XXI of 1881), paid defendant 1 an allowance of Rs 200 a month on account of his maintenance, which allowance, the plaintiff alleged, was illegal and wrongful. The defendants contended that the suit was bad, because notice had not been given to the talukhdari settlement officer as required by s 424 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1892). Held, following Shahbazadee v. Fergusson, I. L. R., 7 Calc., 499, and Bhau Balapa v. Nana, I. L. R., 3 Bom., 343, that although the talukhdari settlement officer acting as manager under XXI of 1881 was a "public officer," yet the suit was maintainable without giving the talukhdari settlement officer the notice required by s. 424 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as it was not a suit arising out of acts done by him in his official capacity. SARDARSINGJI v. a road is a public road, it is sufficient if acts of user by the public are shown to have been acquiesced in by the owner of the land over which the road passes, warrant the inference that the owner intended to make over to the public the right to use the land as a public highway. ANDERSON v. JUGGODUMBA DABI

—Power of municipality over public highway.—
There is a presumption that a highway, or waste land adjoining thereto, belongs to the owners of the soil of the adjoining land. S. 38 of Act XV of 1873
(N. W. P. and Oudh Municipalities Act) was not intended to deprive persons of any private right of property they have in the land used as a public highway, or to confer such rights on the municipality, nor has the section any such effect. In a case where such land ceased to be used as a public highway, and was granted by the municipality to third persons, who proceeded to build thereon,—Held that the owners had a good cause of action against such persons for the demolition of the buildings and restoration of the

Hence an isaphatdar—i.e., a lessee of a village who has undertaken to keep an account of its forest revenues and pay a certain proportion to the Government, keeping the remainder for himself—is not an officer, and therefore not a public servant, within the meaning of s. 21. *REG. v. 1. ——— Liability for nuisance caused by works—Statutory powers—Beng. Reg. I of 1824—Act XLII of 1850—Land taken for public purposes—Suit for injunction to restrain nuisance.

—The plaintiffs, the owners and occupiers of a house and premises in Howrah, sued for an injunction to restrain a nuisance caused by certain workshops, forges, and furnaces erected by the defendants, and for damages for the injury done thereby. The defendants were a railway company incorporated under an Act of Parliament for the purpose of making and maintaining railways in India, and by an agreement (entered into under their Act of Incorporation) between them and the East India Company, they were authorized and directed to make and maintain such railway stations, offices, machinery, and other works (connected with making, maintaining, and working the railways) as the East India Company might deem necessary or expedient. The workshops complained of were erected in 1867 under the sanction of the Bengal Government on land purchased by the Government in 1814 for the purposes of the railway under Regulation I of 1824 and Act XLII of 1850, and which had been made over to the defendants. Held, a nuisance having been proved to exist—that is to say, such annoyance as materially interfered with the ordinary comfort of human existence in the house and caused sensible injury to the property, of the plaintiffs,—the defendants could not plead laches or acquiescence on the plaintiffs' part, as, upon the plaintiffs complaining in May 1870, the defendants had admitted that there was a nuisance, and had up to June 1871 made various efforts to abate it. Nor could the defendants escape liability on the ground that the nuisance had been caused by them in the reasonable exercise of powers conferred upon them by the Legislature. An injunction was granted restraining the defendants, and liberty to apply was reserved in the decree. On a motion by the defendants, supported by an affidavit showing the alterations which they proposed to make with the view of abating the nuisance, and alleging that a period of three months was required to carry out these alterations, and that a refusal to grant this time would necessitate the closing of the company's workshops, and would occasion great inconvenience, the Court granted the time asked for, on the conditions that the defendants paid the costs of the application, and did all they possibly could in the meanwhile to prevent annoyance to the plaintiffs. RAJ MOHUN BOSE v. 2. ——— Fire caused by spark from engine—Action for damages—Negligence—Statutory powers.—The East Indian Railway Company was incorporated under 12 & 13 Vict., c. XCIII, "for the purpose of making and constructing, working, and maintaining" the East Indian Railway, including all necessary, accessory, or convenient extensions, branches, etc., as might be agreed upon between the Railway Company and the East India Company; and by agreement between the Railway Company and the East India Company, dated 17th August 1849, the Railway Company was "authorized and directed to make and maintain such stations, offices, machinery, and other works and conveniences connected with the making, maintaining, and working the railway," and "to provide a good and sufficient working stock of engines, carriages, and other plant and machinery for working the said railway." The plaintiff was the owner of a piece of land adjoining the railway line at Kharmatta, a station on the Chord Line of the Company's railway, on which land was erected a bungalow, with stables and out-houses adjoining. In the action brought by the plaintiff against the Railway Company to recover compensation for damages occasioned by a fire caused by a spark from one of the engines of the Company, the plaintiff alleged want of due care on the part of the defendants in the management of the line by allowing dry grass of too great a length to remain on the railway banks, and in driving their engines along the line without due precautions being taken to prevent the expulsion of sparks. Held that the defendant Company was authorized to run locomotive engines on the lines of railway constructed by the Company under the statutory powers given to it, and therefore the Company was not liable for damage caused in working the line under such statutory powers, without proof of negligence. Held also on the evidence that neither in the construction of their engines nor in the condition of the railway banks was any negligence shown on the part of the Company. HALFORD v. The protection conferred by that section extends till such time as the consignee takes delivery, and does not terminate on the arrival of the articles at their destination. ILLOO KRISTNIAH v. The conditions of s. 10 are not fulfilled by the sender merely giving an account of the quantity and description of the goods delivered for carriage when required to do so by the booking clerk. The bills of lading showed so many bundles said to contain such a number of pieces. The company also contested the plaintiff's enumeration of pieces. Held that the railway company was not liable, there being no evidence that the bundles had been broken or the hides counted by pieces. SCHLAEPFER, PUTZ & Co. v. The railway clerk received the goods and gave a receipt note, on which the following condition was printed: "The company give notice that they are not responsible for loss or damage arising from fire, the act of God, or civil commotion." In the course of the journey a fire broke out in the train, and a large portion of the plaintiff's goods including ten bags of the sugar-candy was destroyed. In an action for damages for non-delivery, - Held (1), under the provisions of s. 9 of the Carriers Act (III of 1865), the burden of proving negligence on the part of the defendants did not rest upon the plaintiff, notwithstanding the condition in the receipt note; (2) the misdescription by the plaintiff's agent, of the twelve bags of sugar-candy as alum did not exonerate the defendants from all liability to the plaintiff in respect of these bags. The plaintiff, however, was only entitled to recover, in respect of the ten lost bags, the value of alum only, and not sugar-candy; while the defendants, on the other hand, could not, in respect of the said ten bags, charge freight as for sugar-candy. ISHVARDAS GULASCHAND v. G. I. P. RAILWAY COMPANY . . . I. L. R., 3 Bom., 120

10. ————— Act XVIII of 1854, ss. 11 and 43—Carriers.—The defendants, having made arrangements with the Madras Railway Company for the through carriage of goods, received from the plaintiff's agent at Poona thirty bags of jowari to be conveyed thence to Bellary and delivered to the plaintiff's agent there. The "goods consignment note," which was signed by the plaintiff's agent at Poona, contained the following condition, of which he had due notice: "The Company receive goods for conveyance to stations on other railways with which they have made arrangements to book through, subject to the rules and regulations and rates and fares of the respective companies over whose lines the goods may pass." On reaching Raichore, the bags of jowari were transferred from the defendants' wagon, in which they had left Poona, into a wagon of the Madras Railway Company. One bag was subsequently lost; but the remaining twenty-nine arrived, and were unloaded in good condition at Bellary on the 19th September 1877. No steps were taken, either by the defendants or by the Madras Railway Company, to give information of the arrival of the bags to the consignee, and he never received them. The plaintiff sued to recover their value. The defendants pleaded (1) that, under a rule of the Madras Railway in force at the time of the making of the contract between the plaintiff and the defendants, delivery was complete the instant the bags were unloaded at Bellary; and (2) that the plaintiff's agent at Bellary did not apply for the goods, but allowed them to remain in the station-yard until they became rotten by rain and were destroyed by order of the Collector some time in November. The Madras Railway Company had issued a public notice of the above rule in the following terms: "The Madras Railway Company hereby give public notice that they will not be responsible for loss of, or damage to, grain after it has been unloaded from the Company's wagons." The defendants sought to incorporate this notice into their contract with the plaintiff by virtue of the condition printed in their "goods consignment note." Held that the said public notice afforded no protection to the defendants, on the ground that it was invalid as a regulation for non-compliance with the provisions of s. 43 of Act XVIII of 1854, inasmuch as it had not been sanctioned by the Local Government, and had not been posted up at all the stations of the Madras line of railway; and that it could not otherwise be binding against the plaintiff, as neither the plaintiff nor his agent were shown to have had any knowledge of it at the time of entering into the contract with the defendants. Quere—Whether, if the plaintiff or his agent had such knowledge at the time of making the consignment, the notice would have constituted such a stipulation as to contravene s. 11 of Act XVIII of 1854 or whether it might be read together with that section, and treated as effectual, except so far as its operation would be limited in its scope by that section. Held also that, the arrival of the grain at the station of destination (Bellary) having been proved, the burden of showing that the goods were ready for delivery to the plaintiff for a reasonable time after such arrival lay on the defendants, although no proof had been given of any application for delivery by the plaintiff within a reasonable time. It is the duty of a railway company to keep goods which have reached the station of their destination, ready there for delivery until the consignee, in the exercise of due diligence, can call for and remove them, and it is the duty of the consignee to call for and remove them within a reasonable time. Semle—The object of s. 11 of Act XVIII of 1854 is to preclude railway companies from being able by any stipulation to escape from liability for loss or injury to goods caused by the gross negligence or misconduct of their agents or servants. SURUTRAM BHAYA v. G. I. P. RAILWAY COMPANY . . . I. L. R., 3 Bom., 96

11. ——— Carriers, Liability of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 151, 152—Act XVIII of 1854—Act III of 1865.—The English common law rule, under which common carriers are held liable as insurers of goods against all risks except the act of God or the King's enemies, is not now in force in India. In cases not met by the special provisions of the Act relating to railways and carriers, the liability of carriers for loss or damage to goods entrusted to them is prescribed by ss. 151 and 152 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). The plaintiff's goods were being carried in a train of the defendants from Nandgaon to Egatpuri. During the journey the train was plundered by robbers, and the plaintiff's goods were stolen. Held the defendants were entitled to the benefit of s. 152 of the Contract Act, and should be permitted to give evidence that the robbers of the plaintiff's goods were not the servants or agents of the defendants, and that the defendants (by their servants and agents) took as much care of their goods as a man of ordinary prudence would, under similar circumstances, take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality, and value as the goods in question. KUVERJI TULSIDAS v. Act (IX of 1890), s. 54, cl. (1), s. 72, cls. (a), (b), sub-cl. (2) and (3)—Carriers Act, 1865.—The plaintiff sued the defendants (a railway company) for damage for short delivery of goods consigned to him. The defendants pleaded a special contract signed by the consignor, which, in consideration of their carrying the goods at a special reduced rate instead of the ordinary tariff rate, exempted them from liability for loss or damage to the goods from any cause whatever, before, during, and after transit over their railway or other railways working in connection therewith. Held that under the contract the defendants were not liable to the plaintiff. TIPPANNA v. 13. ——— Railway Act (IV of 1879), s. 11—Loss of goods—Carrier—Bailment—Declaration of nature and value of goods and payment of increased charge, Effect of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 151.—In respect of goods for which, under s. 11 of the Indian Railway Act (IV of 1879), a railway company is under no liability unless "an increased charge" is paid, the payment of an increased charge puts them under the same liability as they are under with respect to goods not specially provided for by that section, viz., the liability of ordinary bailees. The payment of "an increased charge" is not equivalent to insurance. In January 1890 a box containing rupees was delivered by the plaintiffs to the defendant Company in Bombay to be carried to Saugor. From the evidence it appeared that the plaintiffs did not intend to insure the box. The box was taken to the booking office at the station, and the parcel clerk asked what it contained, and was told that it contained coin, and he learned casually that the amount was Rs. 6,000. The clerk charged Rs. 18-1-0 for the box, which was the "treasure rate" for carriage. This sum was paid, and the box was duly despatched, but was lost or stolen in the course of transit. The plaintiffs sued to recover the Rs. 6,000. The defendants contended that, having regard to the provisions of s. 11 of Act IV of 1879, they were not liable, inasmuch as (1) the contents of the box had not been duly disclosed, nor (2) had an increased charge been paid. The plaintiffs obtained a decree in the lower Court. On appeal,—Held (reversing the decree) that the defendant company was not liable (1) because there was no sufficient declaration of the value and contents of the box; (2) because the sum paid by the plaintiffs for the carriage of the box was the ordinary charge for treasure, and was not the increased charge which under s. 11 of Act VI of 1879 should have been paid in order to make the company liable. GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY CO. v. Railway Company to levy terminal charges—Stat. 12 & 18 Vict., c. 83 (Local and Pers.)—Railway Act (IX of 1890), ss. 41, 45, 46—Carriers.*—By the Act of Incorporation of the defendant Company it was enacted that it should be lawful for the Railway Company and the East India Company to enter into such contracts, etc., as they thought fit (inter alia) "for performing all matters and things necessary or convenient for carrying into effect the making, maintaining, and working the railway * * * including any provision as to the tolls, receipts, and profits thereof." Subsequently the defendant Company and the East India Company entered into an agreement with each other, under which the defendant Company were empowered to make certain charges called "terminal charges"—charges which are levied on account of the carrying of goods to and from the wagon, loading and unloading them on and from the wagon, and for the use of the Company's premises till the goods are removed. The plaintiffs sued to recover from the defendants the sum of Rs. 1,54,152-11, which during the three years prior to suit the plaintiffs had been obliged by the defendants to pay as "terminal charges" on consignments of cotton made by the plaintiffs from up-country stations to Bombay. The plaintiffs objected to these charges as not within the scope of the powers conferred by the Act of Incorporation of the defendant Company, and contended (1) that such charges were illegal; (2) that if not illegal, they were excessive. Held by FARRAN, J., dismissing the suit, that the defendants were entitled to charge "terminal charges" on the goods carried by them for the plaintiffs, subject only, as to the rates and amounts thereof, to the sanction of Government; and that the rates charged to the plaintiffs were not higher than the sanctioned charges. "Terminal charge" means a charge for the use of goods station and for the various duties which a

Railway Company, as common carriers, perform in connection with the goods consigned to them for carriage. Semble—Under ss. 41, 45, and 46 of Act IX of 1890, the High Court has no jurisdiction to consider or entertain a claim relating to terminals charged by the defendants subsequently to the time at which that Act came into operation. Held on appeal (SARGENT, C.J., and BAYLEY, J.) that these charges were within the authority given by that Act. Such charges, if not strictly "tolls," were certainly charges for performing of services, if not "necessary" at any rate "convenient for the working of the railway," and payment for such services might also properly be regarded as a source of "profit" to the Railway Company, within the meaning of that Act. The only "terminal charge" sanctioned by Government was a charge sanctioned in 1865, and then, expressly defined as "including collection and delivery." The defendant Company had since that date given up "collecting and delivering," but there had been no new scale of terminal charges submitted for sanction, or sanctioned. It was consequently contended by the plaintiffs that the "terminal charge" now levied had never been sanctioned. Held also that a review of the proceedings leading to the sanction of 1865 showed that Government had contemplated the possible abandonment by the Company of "collection and delivery" when it sanctioned the rate then fixed; and that consequently it must be presumed that Government had left it to the defendant Company to make such deductions, in case of abandonment of this portion of their services, as they should think proper, which they had done. LALJI BHAI SHAMJI v. 17. ——— Railways Act, (IX of 1890), s. 72—Condition under which goods despatched by Railway—Absence of proof of deterioration—Remoteness of damage—Contract Act, s. 73.—The plaintiff, who was a tailor, delivered a sewing machine and some cloths to the Madras Railway Company (the defendant) to be sent to a place where he expected to carry on his business with special profit by reason of a forthcoming festival. Through the fault of the Company's servants, the goods were delayed in transmission, and were not delivered until some days after the conclusion of the festival. The plaintiff had given no notice to the Company that the goods were required to be delivered within a fixed time for any special purpose, and he had signed a forwarding note under a statement that he agreed to be bound by the conditions at the back, and one of those conditions was to the effect that the Company is not liable "for any loss of or damage to any goods whatever by reason of accidental or unavoidable delays in transit or otherwise." The plaintiff now sued to recover from the Company a sum on account of his estimated profits and the travelling expenses of himself and his assistant at the place of delivery and their expenses for food and lodging while there. Held (1) that, as the plaintiff had not shown that the goods had undergone deterioration in value or otherwise, the condition above cited was not void under Railways Act, 1890, s. 72, although it had not been approved by the Governor General in Council; (2) that the plaintiff was bound by the condition even if he was in fact ignorant of its effect; (3) that the damages claimed were too remote. MADRAS RAILWAY CO. v. GOVINDA RAU I. L. R., 21 Mad., 172

18. ————— Duty to carry passengers safely—Explosion in carriage—Negligence—Onus of proof—Ignorance or knowledge of law as a defence—Its limitation—Damages, Measure of—Costs—Held by the Appellate Court (affirming the decision of the Court below): In providing for the safety of their passengers it is the duty of a Railway Company to exercise such a degree of care, at the very least, as may reasonably be required from them under all the circumstances of the case, and where an accident happens, they must show that it was not preventible by any care or skill. If a railway carriage be rendered dangerous to the passengers travelling therein by reason of the fact that there are fireworks in it, and if the carrying of the fireworks could have been prevented by the exercise of due care on the part of the Railway Company, they are liable for damages for negligence should an explosion of the fireworks occur. Where loss of life and damage have resulted from the explosion of fireworks in a passenger carriage, the onus is on the Railway Company to show that they took due care to prevent the conveyance of fireworks in that manner, and not on the plaintiff to show that they did not. *Scott v. The maxim that every man is presumed to know the law is limited to the determination of the civil or criminal liability of the person whose knowledge is in question. It cannot legitimately be made use of where (as in the present case) the parties are different and distinct from him. EAST INDIAN RAILWAY CO. v. KALY DASS MOOKERJEE I. L. R., 26 Calc., 465 carriage open or unfastened—Hurt caused to passenger while trying to secure door.—Leaving the door of a railway carriage open or unfastened amounts to negligence on the part of a Railway Company, and the Company is liable for any injury caused thereby to a passenger. If any inconvenience or danger is caused by the negligence of the Company, a passenger may lawfully attempt to get rid of such inconvenience or danger, provided that in doing so he runs no obvious risk disproportionate to the inconvenience or danger, and is not himself guilty of any negligence; and, if in such attempt he is injured, the Company is liable in damages. The door of a railway carriage attached to a train running from Pona to Bombay was left open or unfastened when the train left the Khaudala station. The plaintiff was then asleep in the carriage. He subsequently awoke when the train was passing through a tunnel, and found that the whole of the door, which opened outwards, had been torn away from its hinges, except the upper part or sunshade, which was flapping backwards and forwards against the side of the tunnel and the door post of the carriage. In attempting to secure it, the top of the plaintiff's finger was torn away and the bone of one of his fingers fractured. Held that the injuries were caused by the negligence of the Railway Company, and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages. *BROMLEY v. RAILWAYS ACT (XXV OF 1871).

— s. 2—Act XVIII of 1854, s. 17—Refusal to produce ticket—Fraudulent intention—Trespass—Passenger by rail.—The plaintiff entered a carriage on the defendants' railway at Surat with the purpose of proceeding to Bombay. By an oversight, and without any fraudulent intent, he omitted to procure a ticket at Surat. On arriving at Nowsari, he applied to the station master for a ticket to Bombay, but was refused; he was, however, allowed by the defendants' servants to proceed in the same train to Bulsar, where he again applied for a ticket, and was again refused; but was directed by the defendants' servants to get into the train and not leave it again. At Dhandu he again got out and applied for a ticket to the station master. During a discussion between the plaintiff's master and the station master, the plaintiff, at the direction of his master, re-entered the train. Ultimately the station master refused to give the plaintiff a ticket, and ordered him to get out of the train; and, on his not complying with this order, sent a sepoy, who forcibly removed the plaintiff from the carriage. In an action by the plaintiff to recover damages for the forcible and illegal removal of the plaintiff from the carriage, and for the illegal detention of the plaintiff at the station at Dhandu, and for the illegal refusal of the defendants to allow the plaintiff to proceed in the train to Bombay,—Held, 1st, that the latter portion of s. 2 of Act XXV of 1871, amending s. 1 of Act XVIII of 1854, which provides for payments to be made by persons failing to produce their tickets when demanded by the servants of the company, applies only to the case of a person who has received a ticket and will not or cannot produce it, and not to a person travelling without having obtained a ticket with no intention to defraud; 2nd, that the absence of a fraudulent intention did not make the entry into the carriage less unlawful, and consequently that the plaintiff started from Surat as a trespasser; 3rd, that the conduct of the railway officials at the stations intermediate between Surat and Dhandu, if it amounted at all to leave and license to the plaintiff to proceed without a ticket, could only operate as such until the train stopped at the next station; 4th, that there was no legal obligation on the station master to issue a ticket to the plaintiff to enable him to proceed from Dhandu. *PRATAB DAJI v. — s. 21—Allowing cattle to stray on the line—Fences to line.—On the 10th April 1874, prisoner's cow strayed on a railway line provided with a fence. On the 13th June following, the Government published rules under s. 21 of the Railway Act Amendment Act, 1871, determining what kind of fences should be deemed to be suitable for the exclusion of cattle. On the date of the offence there were no such rules. No evidence was offered of the state of the fence, and the prisoner was convicted solely on his admission that he was the owner of the cow. Held that the state of the fences required specific proof, in the absence of which the conviction could not be sustained. ANONYMOUS . 8 Mad., Ap., 1

There was no evidence that the safety of any persons in any train had been endangered by his neglect of duty. On the contrary, by reason of precautions taken by other persons, any possible danger which might have resulted from his neglect was avoided. Held that he could not be convicted and punished under s. 29 of Act XXV of 1871. *QUEEN v. The order, under s. 81, in case of his refusal to pay it, should be one merely for recovery of the amount due as the fare, and not an order to pay such or any other sum as if it were a fine. 1. ——— Appointment—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 503. Discretion.—The appointment of receiver is a matter resting in the discretion of the Court. The powers of appointing a receiver conferred by s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be exercised with a sound discretion, upon a view of the whole circumstances of the case, not merely the circumstances which might make the appointment expedient for the protection of the property, but all the circumstances connected with the right which is asserted and has to be established. The Court will not interfere by appointing a receiver where a right is asserted to property in the possession of a defendant claiming to hold it under a legal title, unless a strong case is made out. Owen v. Homan, 4 H. L. C., 997, 1032, and Clayton v. Attorney-General, Cooper's cases, Vol. I, p. 97, referred to. SIDHESWARI DABI v. ABHOYESWARI DABI. I. L. R., 15 Calc., 818

2. ——— Temporary injunction—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 492 and 503.—The distinction between a case in which a temporary injunction may be granted and a case in which a receiver may be appointed is that, while in either case it must be shown that the property should be preserved from waste or alienation, in the former case it would be sufficient if it be shown that the plaintiff in the suit has a fair question to raise as to the existence of the right alleged; while in the latter case a good prima facie title has to be made out. Sidheswari Dabi v. Abhoyeswari Dabi, I. L. R., 15 Calc., 818, approved. An order of the lower Court for appointment of a receiver under s. 503 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882, was set aside, and an order for a temporary injunction under s. 492 of the Code granted. *CHANDIDAT JHA v. 9. ———— Grounds for appointment—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 503—Waste by Hindu widow.—The powers conferred by s. 503 of the Civil Procedure Code are not to be exercised as a matter of course, and it is not a reason for allowing an application for the appointment of a receiver that it can do no harm to appoint one. The discretion given by that section is one that should be used with the greatest care and caution. Because a plaintiff in his plaint makes violent and wholesale charges of waste and malversation against a defendant in possession of property as executor under a will or as the tenant for life, and upon this basis applies for a receiver to be appointed, it is not a necessary consequence that such appointment should be made. Held in this case, where the sons of a Hindu widow, in possession of her husband's estate under a will, sued their mother, as reversioners under the will, for possession of the estate, on the ground of mismanagement and waste, and on the same grounds applied for the appointment of a receiver under s. 503 of the Civil Procedure Code, that a receiver had been appointed on insufficient grounds. *PROSONOMOY DEBI v. When therefore a suit was brought under Bengal Act VIII of 1869 for arrears of rent and for ejectment of the defendant,—Held that a receiver of the rents and profits of the tenure might properly be appointed under the provisions of s. 503 of the Civil Procedure Code. *KARTIC NATH PANDY v. 12. ———— Ground for Appointment of receiver—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 503—Discretion of Court—Waste.—The removal of a large amount of property by the defendant, and under circumstances which might fairly give rise to suspicion during the pendency of the suit in which the question of title to that property would be determined, is a sufficiently strong ground for the appointment of a receiver. *Sidheswari Dabi v. In such a case "the owner" in s. 503 (d) means the whole body of owners to whom the joint estate belongs. The Court has jurisdiction to place the whole of a joint estate out of which a plaintiff seeks to have his share partitioned in the hands of a receiver, and to order that a receiver so appointed shall be at liberty to raise money on the security of the whole of such joint estate. *POKHAIR NATH MOOKERJEE v. 14. ———— Receiver of mortgaged property appointed at instance of mortgages—Receiver appointed by Appeal Court—Practice.—In a suit by a mortgagee for foreclosure or sale in default of payment of his mortgage-debt the Court of first instance, when passing a decree for the plaintiff, refused, on the plaintiff's application, to appoint a receiver of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property. The plaintiff appealed against the latter part of the decree, and after filing a memorandum of appeal obtained a rule for the appointment of a receiver until the hearing of the appeal. The Court of appeal, after argument, made the rule absolute, and appointed a receiver until the hearing of the appeal, and subsequently, when the appeal came on for hearing, varied the decree of the Court below by appointing a receiver of the mortgaged property. The High Court possesses the same powers with regard to the appointment of a receiver as are possessed and exercised by the Courts in England under the Judicature Act. *JAKISSONDAS GANGADAS v. 16. ————— Jurisdiction of District Judge to appoint receiver—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 503 and 505.—A District Judge has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of properties which are the subject of a suit or attachment in other Courts, even though such Courts may have been subordinate to his Court. (Ss. 503 and 505 of the Civil Procedure Code reviewed.) In a suit upon a mortgage, the mortgaged property was directed to be sold, and the time of grace had expired. An application was then made by the judgment-debtor to the Court of execution for the appointment of a receiver under s. 503, both as regards the mortgaged property as well as other properties belonging to the judgment-debtor. Held that the Court had no power to appoint a receiver of properties other than the subject-matter of the suit, and as regards the mortgaged property a receiver could be appointed on the mere ground that the property would not fetch so much by forced sale as it would by sale under a private contract. *LATAFUT HOSSAIN v. 18. ————— Nomination by Subordinate Courts with grounds of nomination—Sanction of the District Judge—Order passed by the District Judge—Power to review—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 505.—The District Judge made an ex-parte order for the appointment of a receiver under s. 505 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Subsequently, it having been shown to the Judge that the nomination made by the Subordinate Judge on which the order was passed was incorrect, the District Judge made an order admitting a review. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. Without deciding whether an appeal would lie against the order of the District Judge, the High Court dismissed the appeal, holding that, the order of the District Judge having in the first instance been ex parte, he had clearly the power to review it. The words of s. 505 give the District Judge full discretion to pass such order as the circumstances of the case in all their bearings require: the "nomination" in that section is equivalent to the conditional appointment of a receiver which the District Judge can accept or reject, or modify. *CHUNILAL HAJARIMAL v. 19. ————— Subordinate Judge; Power of, to appoint—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 503 and 505.—A Subordinate Judge, when considering the expediency of the appointment of a receiver, is acting under s. 503 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) as explained by s. 505. [I. L. R., 22 All., 214]

21. ————— Duration of receivership—Discretion of Court—Practice—Variance between judgment and decree—Civil Procedure Code, s. 206.—It is within the discretion of a Court appointing a receiver in a suit to order that the office should continue permanently after the decree when such continuance is necessary, or for so long as it may be so. A decree of the High Court declared it to be necessary that a permanent appointment should be made of a receiver and manager of the estate allotted by the Government to the family of the deceased Maharajah of Tanjore, and directed that fresh appointments to the receivership should be made from time to time as occasion might require during the life of the senior widow, under whose management the estate had been originally placed, and the lives of the co-widows surviving her, or for so long as the Court might consider necessary. Held that the decree directing the permanent receivership was not in variation of the judgment which it purported to follow; that the Court had a discretion to make such an order when necessary for the preservation of the estate; and that so doing was in accordance with the practice, there being nothing to prevent the Court from giving the management to the senior widow living at the time, if she should be fit to manage the estate on behalf of all interested in it. *MATHURBI UMAMBA BOYI SAIBA v. After decree, on the application of the plaintiff, a receiver was appointed under s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure to collect outstanding debts for the purpose of executing the decree. The receiver having sued in 1883 to recover a debt which was due to the

Where, however, the garnishee denies the debt, there is no other course open to the judgment-creditor than to have it sold, or to have a receiver appointed under s. 503 of the Civil Procedure Code. TOOLSIA GOOLAL v. 24. . . . Receiver of High Court—Position of—Right to sue and defend suits.—The Receiver of the High Court does not represent the estate for which he is receiver, but is merely an officer of the Court, and as such cannot sue and be sued, except with the permission of the Court. MILLER v. RAM RANJAN CHAKRAVARTI . . . [I. L. R., 10 Cal., 1014]

25. . . . Position and functions of—Parties—Suit for specific performance.—The receiver in a suit is nothing more than the hand of the Court for the purpose of holding the property of the litigants whenever it is necessary that it should be kept in the grasp of the Court in order to preserve the subject-matter of the suit pendente lite; and the possession of the receiver is simply the possession of the Court. He has no personal rights in the property, nor can he take any steps with regard to it without the sanction of the Court. If it is necessary for him to take action of any sort, he should be put in motion by the Court on the application of the parties to the suit; and whatever he rightly does with regard to the property, he does simply as the agent of the owners of the property. Where the receiver in a suit had, by order of Court, sold certain property in the suit, and had executed the contract of sale in his own name, a plaintiff praying for specific performance against the purchaser for refusing to complete the contract was admitted with the receiver as co-plaintiff, he having obtained leave to sue. WILKINSON v. 26. . . . Right of suit as receiver and right to possession of property—Rule of Supreme Court.—In a suit by K against B and others, the Supreme Court ordered that the estate of B (deceased) should be applied to the payment of his debts, legacies, etc., and appointed a receiver of the rents and profits of his real property. It also ordered the defendants and persons claiming through them to give up to the receiver such of the real property as might be in their possession. Subsequently, in the same suit, the High Court declared that K was entitled to a moiety of the estate of B after payment of costs and legacies, and directed the estate to be sold and the proceeds brought into Court. Afterwards the receiver brought a suit in his own name against R and one S, alleging that, though the property had been decreed to K and himself jointly, yet K had, by collusion, obtained sole possession of it, and that, in execution of a money-decree against her, it had been sold to S. Held that, as Receiver of the High Court, plaintiff had no title as of right against S to the immediate possession of the property, and no right to sue in another Court in his own person to receive possession thereof. The rule on the Original Side of the Court, taken from the practice of the English Court of Chancery, is not to compel a party to a suit to give up to the receiver possession of property unless an order of Court to that effect has previously been made upon him; the proper course being by proceedings in Court to fix an occupation rent, and to order the party in possession to pay the same. RAM LOCHUN SIRCAR v. HOGG . . . 10 W. R., 430

27. . . . Power of receiver—Power to question title of third party.—A receiver appointed by order of the Supreme Court can only sue for possession, and has no right to question the title of a third party in a suit with respect to the property put under his management. DINONATH SREEMONEE v. 28. . . . Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 503—Right to sue.—A zamindari was attached in execution of certain decrees against the zamindar, and the plaintiff was appointed receiver with full powers, under s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to manage the zamindari. Before the appointment of the receiver, the zamindar had expended certain sums at the defendant's request to repair a tank for the irrigation of lands held by them in common with him. This suit was brought to recover the sum so expended. It was objected that the receiver could not maintain the suit on the ground that the sum sued for was neither the subject of a suit against the zamindar nor property attached in execution of a decree against him. Held that the receiver could maintain the suit. SUNDARAM v. SANKARA . . . I. L. R., 9 Mad., 324

35. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 503.—In 1879 a zamindar granted a lease of part of the zamindari for twenty years, reserving a rent of Rs18,000 per annum. In 1881 the zamindari having been attached by a creditor, the zamindar granted a new lease in perpetuity in lieu of the former lease, reserving a rent of Rs12,000 a year. A receiver of the zamindari, having subsequently been appointed with full powers under the provisions of s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure, sued the lessee to recover rent at the rate reserved in the first lease from 1881. Held that the receiver was entitled to recover the rent claimed. The provisions of s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure were intended to declare that the receiver, in respect of all property which was or could be attached, had the powers of the owner as they existed at the time the property was brought under the orders of the Court by attachment, provided that they have not ceased by operation of law. GOPALASAMI v. 36. ———— Parties to conveyance—Sale by receiver under order of Court.—Where certain property, the subject-matter of a suit, in which the Court receiver had been appointed receiver, was sold in pursuance of an order of Court made by consent of parties, Held that an application by the Court receiver for an order that the purchaser do complete the purchase according to the conditions of sale must be refused as not being made in proper form. A sale of property under an order of Court by a person appointed receiver in a suit is not a sale by the Court. The fact that such person is the Court receiver does not place him in a different position. When the receiver sells under such an order, it is necessary that he, being in possession of the property, should be a party to the conveyance. CHANDRA NATH BISWAS v. BISWANATH BISWAS

41. ——— Money in hands of Receiver—Estate administered by Court—Pressing claims against estate, or part owners thereof—Power to order Receiver to pay—High Court, Power of.—Plaintiff was admittedly entitled to a half share of an estate, which this suit was brought to divide. A decree had been made referring it to the Commissioner to ascertain and divide the said estate, and a Receiver had been appointed. No power had been especially reserved by the decree to the Receiver to pay pressing or other debts due by the estate, or the part owners thereof. Some time would elapse before the accounts could be taken in the Commissioner's office, and meanwhile two creditors were threatening attachment of the property of the estate, and their debts were running at considerable interest. The estate was not otherwise indebted. There was money in the Receiver's hands to the credit of the estate, half of which would be more than sufficient to pay off the claims of these creditors. The plaintiff applied to the Court for an order to the Receiver to pay these two debts out of the plaintiff's half share of the moneys in his hands, leaving the plaintiff to prove his right to debit the estate with such payments. Held that the Court had power to make the order asked for, though such an order would only be made in special cases and on special conditions. Held further that the present was a

On the 2nd May, when the case was called on, defendants were not present, but they appeared on the 3rd. The Subordinate Magistrate heard what they had to say, and directed the penalties on the forfeited recognizances to be levied from the defendants. Held that there was no ground for the interference of the High Court as a Court of Revision; that there was nothing illegal in requiring defendants to execute such a bond, and that no notice was necessary before proceeding to enforce the penalty. ANONYMOUS [6 Mad., Ap., 39

s. 448.—An order under s. 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872) binding down the accused to keep the peace, upon conviction for "house trespass" under s. 448 of the Indian Penal Code, cannot stand where the intention of the accused for committing the trespass was to have illicit intercourse with the complainant's wife. Queen v. Gendoo Khan, 7 W. R., Cr., 14, and Queen v. Jhapoo, 20 W. R., Cr., 37, distinguished. It is necessary before an order under s. 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be made that the accused should have an opportunity of answering to an accusation for an offence of the kind, upon a conviction for which such an order can be made. *SUBAL CHUNDER DUTY v. In order to bring his acts within the terms of the latter section, there must either be an express finding to the effect that his acts involved a breach of the peace, or an evident intention of committing the same, or the evidence must be so clear as to satisfy the Court (without an express finding) that such was the case. *JIB LAL GIR v. There may be findings in the case which would justify such an order if such findings can be brought within the terms of s. 106. Gib Lal Gir v. Jogmohan Gir, I. L. R., 26 Cal., 576, referred to. Where the accused were convicted under s. 143 of the Penal Code and ordered under s. 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to furnish security to keep the peace, and it was alleged that the facts as proved showed that the accused came in a body, some of whom were armed with lathis and some of whom used threats and did other acts showing an evident intention to commit breaches of the peace, — Held that there should have been an express finding to that effect; that if the accused or any of them acted in such a manner, they should have been convicted of criminal intimidation or other offence which would enable the Magistrate to bind them over to keep the peace; and that the order under s. 106 should be set aside. *SHRO BHARAN SINGH v. Where therefore a person was convicted under ss. 503 and 506 of the Penal Code of such offence, — Held that the Magistrate by whom such person was convicted could not, under s. 489 of the Criminal Procedure Code, require him to give a personal recognizance for keeping the peace. *EMPERESS OF INDIA v. 71. ————— Presence of accused—Necessity of adjudicating on evidence.—A Magistrate is not competent to require persons to give security to keep the peace until he has adjudicated, on evidence taken in their presence, that they have by their conduct rendered this necessary. RUN Bahadoor Singh v. 72. ————— Dispute likely to cause breach of peace—Report of police officer.—The existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace must be first proved by legal evidence before the Magistrate can proceed to call upon the parties to enter into recognizances to keep the peace. The report of a police officer is not such legal evidence. ABHAYA CHOWDREY v. BRAH

73. ————— Report of police officer—Procedure.—Held (GLOVER, J., dissenting) the report of a police officer, though it justifies the issuing of a summons, is not sufficient ground on which to bind a man over in a recognizance to keep the peace. The Magistrate must adjudicate on the question whether there is reasonable ground for believing that the defendant is likely to commit a breach of the peace, after taking evidence in the presence of the person charged, and giving him an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses. BEHARI PATAK v. 77. ————— Report of Subordinate Magistrate—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, ss. 280, 287, 288.—The report of a Subordinate Magistrate, although it is credible information on which a Magistrate of the district would be justified, under s. 280 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in issuing a summons, is not evidence on which he can properly arrive at a conclusion that the accused is likely to cause a breach of the peace; ss. 287 and 288 of the Code require that evidence in such a case shall be recorded, and, if none is forthcoming, security to keep the peace should not be demanded. REG. v. 80. ————— Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 107, 112, 115—Security to keep the peace—Substance of information—Joint inquiry.—A Magistrate ordered sixty-nine persons to show cause why they should not give security to keep the peace, it having been reported to him by the police and the tehsildar of the pergunnah in which such persons resided that they were likely to commit a breach of the peace at a religious procession which was about to take place, and the holding of which was opposed to their religious tenets. After an inquiry, as against all the accused jointly, the Magistrate, on the evidence of the tehsildar and a sub-inspector of police, ordered that ten of the accused, who were said to be the “ringleaders,” should enter into bonds with sureties and the rest should enter into their own recognizances to keep the peace for one year. Held that the Magistrate’s order, purporting to be prepared under s. 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code, did not adequately or properly disclose the substance of the report or information upon which he issued his summons: the parties were entitled to something more than a mere assertion by the Magistrate that he had been informed that a breach of the peace was likely to occur, in order to enable them, if they were in a position to do so, to bring evidence to rebut the truth of such information; that the very loose statements of the tehsildar and the sub-inspector, as to the large majority of the persons summoned, were quite insufficient to justify the wholesale order for security passed by the Magistrate; that as the religious procession would have been over in a fortnight, it was a most excessive exercise of power to require all the parties to give security for one year; and that the Magistrate should have dealt with the cases of the ten alleged “ringleaders” first, and should have required the tehsildar and sub-inspector to give much fuller statements seriatim, and particularly as to each individual man; and as to the remaining fifty-nine, there should have been some clear and distinct proof affecting each of them and warranting the inference that such person was likely to commit a breach of the peace or to do a wrongful act likely to occasion a breach of the peace. *QUEEN-EMRESS v. 81. ————— Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 107, 112, 117, 118—Nature of order to show cause—Onus probandi—Nature and quantum of evidence necessary before passing order for security.—An order passed by a Magistrate under ss. 107 and 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code, requiring any person to “show cause” why he should not be ordered to furnish security for keeping the peace, is not in the nature of a rule nisi implying that the burden of proving innocence is upon such person. The onus of proof lies upon the prosecution to establish circumstances justifying the action of the Magistrate in calling upon persons to furnish security. Dunne v. Hem Chandra Chowdhry, 4

8. LIKELIHOOD OF BREACH OF PEACE AND EVIDENCE—concluded.

B. L. R., F. B., 46, and Queen v. Niranjun Singh, 8 N. W., 481, referred to. In proceedings instituted under s. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code against more persons than one, it is essential for the prosecution to establish what each individual implicated has done to furnish a basis for the apprehension that he will commit a breach of the peace. In holding such an inquiry it is improper to treat what is evidence against one of such persons as evidence against all, without discriminating between the cases of the various persons implicated. Queen-Emress v. Nathu, I. L. R., 6 All., 214, referred to. Although in an inquiry under s. 117 the nature or quantum of evidence need not be so conclusive as is necessary in trials for offences, the Magistrate should not proceed purely upon an apprehension of a breach of the peace, but is bound to see that substantial grounds for such an apprehension are established by proof of facts against each person implicated which would lead to the conclusion that an order for furnishing security is necessary. What the nature of the facts should be depends upon the circumstances of each case, but where the nature of the Magistrate’s information requires it, overt acts must be proved before an order under s. 118 can be made, and such an order cannot be passed against any person simply on the ground that another is likely to commit a breach of the peace. *Queen v. Abdool Hug, 20 W. R., Cr., 57; Goshian Lachmun Pershad Pooree v. Pohoop Narain Pooree, 24 W. R., Cr., 80; Rajah Run Bahadoor v. Ranee Tillessuree Koer, 27 W. 83. ————— Evidence taken irregularly.—The High Court declined to interfere with an order passed by a Magistrate in a case in which he ordered security to be taken for the preservation of the peace, where it appeared that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the order, although such evidence was taken in the vernacular and in disregard of the provisions of s. 267 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1861. *QUEEN v. XVIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure to pass the latter order regarding recognizances, the Sessions Judge could not on appeal, while upholding the conviction for grievous hurt, cancel the order as to take recognizances, the evidence on the record being sufficient for that purpose. QUEEN v. A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to call on a person who has entered into a recognizance bond, under s. 493 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to pay the penalty or show cause why he should not do so, without previous prima facie proof, by which is meant evidence on oath, that it has been forfeited. IN RE HARIRAM BIRBHAN 11 Bom., 170

99. ——— Sufficiency of evidence to prove forfeiture.—Before a recognizance can be forfeited, it must be proved that the person accused has either personally broken the peace or abetted some other person or persons in breaking it. The mere fact that the accused is a servant of one of two rival parties for whose benefit the breach took place is not sufficient. QUEEN v. KALI BHIRUB SANDYAL 11 W. R., Cr., 52

100. ——— Necessity to record evidence of forfeiture.—Before a Magistrate can declare that recognizances to keep the peace have been forfeited, he must record legal evidence in the presence of the accused, proving that he was about to do something which would cause a breach of the peace. IN RE KALIKANT ROY CHOWDHY [3 B. 101. ——— Necessity for evidence of forfeiture—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 502.—An order estreating a recognizance or a bail bond must be made upon evidence duly recorded in the case, and not upon evidence taken in other cases. Where a Magistrate makes an order forfeiting a recognizance under s. 502 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the terms of the section must be strictly followed. It is not competent to direct that in default of payment the person whose recognizance is forfeited should be imprisoned, without first issuing a warrant for the attachment and sale of his immoveable property. IN THE MATTER OF MOHESH CHUNDER ROY 10 C. 103. ——— Opportunity to accused for cross-examination of witness—Proceedings on forfeiture of recognizance—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 502.—A Magistrate is not justified in forfeiting a recognizance under s. 502 of Act X of 1872, unless the party charged with a breach of the peace has had an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses upon whose evidence the rule to show cause why the recognizance should

104. ——— Liability to forfeiture Evidence necessary—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 514.—The mere fact of the person for whom another stands surety being convicted of a breach of the peace ought not to be sufficient to make the surety bond executed by the latter liable to forfeiture without any evidence taken in the presence of the surety to show that the forfeiture has been incurred. The language of s. 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) does not indicate that the final order making a person bound by a bond can be made without taking any evidence in his presence or giving him any opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses on whose evidence the forfeiture is held to be established. The mere production of the original record or of a certified copy of the original record of the trial in which the principal had been convicted of breaking the peace within the period covered by a bond would not be conclusive, if indeed it would be any evidence, against the surety in a proceeding under s. 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. 1. ——— Jurisdiction of Recorders — Execution of decrees made by Town Assistant Commissioner.—The Court of the Recorder of Moulmein has no jurisdiction to execute a decree made by the late Court of the Town Assistant Commissioner. KYANPETEE v. NGA SHA LAW . . . 14 W. R., 386

2. ——— Trespass to personalty in foreign State—Judicial cognizance—Question of title.—Trespass to personalty in a foreign State (the title to such personalty depending upon the right to land in such foreign State) is cognizable by the Recorder's Court, so as to rebut a prima facie title to such personalty acquired within the Court's jurisdiction. The Recorder's Court cannot take judicial cognizance of the fact that the country in which the rights of the party attempting to rebut such prima facie title accrued is lawless and unsettled, and possesses no tribunal capable of pronouncing a decision on the rights of the parties which the Recorder's Court could consider as the decision of a Court of competent jurisdiction. Although the foreign State might be civilised, and have Courts competent to try the title, the Recorder's Court would have a right in a suit against a party subject to his jurisdiction to try incidentally the question of title to the land for the purpose of determining the right to the personalty. RECORDER OF RANGOON—concluded.

1. ——— Cause of action—Defendant out of the jurisdiction.—The Court of the Recorder of Rangoon had no jurisdiction in a suit brought against a defendant dwelling in Surat, though the cause of action arose in Rangoon. ANONYMOUS CASE . . . 18 W. R., 397

2. ——— Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1892), s. 16 (c), proviso—Suit for damages for trespass on land and for injunction.—The plaintiff sued in the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon to recover damages for trespass on land in his own possession situate outside the limits of the original jurisdiction of the Recorder's Court; asking at the same time for an injunction restraining the defendant from further acts of trespass. Both plaintiff and defendant resided within the limits of the original jurisdiction of the Recorder's Court. Held (1) that the plaintiff, having alleged that the land was in his possession, was not entitled to the benefit of the proviso to s. 16 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and (2) that a suit for damage to land cannot be said to be a suit for which relief can be entirely obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant, even though it may be joined with a claim for an injunction; and that for the above reasons the Recorder had no jurisdiction to try the suit. 3. ——— Reference to High Court, Calcutta—Lower Burma Courts Act (XI of 1889), s. 42—Conflicting decisions—Decision of Superior Court—Power of Recorder to refer.—The Recorder of Rangoon, in a suit tried by him, referred to certain decisions of the High Courts at Calcutta, Bombay, and Madras, which were in conflict, and, not agreeing with the decision of the Calcutta High Court, referred the case to the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction. Held that, as the decisions of the High Court at Calcutta are binding on the Recorder, he had no jurisdiction to make the reference, and that it must be returned. MAHOMED HADY v. was the 30th September 1880. A Division Bench of the High Court held on the appeal on the case coming up before them on the 18th October 1877 that the suit was not based upon any express contract made between the parties; that the transaction which took place on that date did not constitute an implied contract; and that therefore these contentions were not open to the plaintiffs, but the Court referred the question whether the plaintiffs' claim, so far as it was based on the statement of account on the 18th October 1877, fell within art. 64 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877. Held by MITTER, PRINSEP, and McDONELL, J.J.—That the question referred was a matter of limitation arising in the case which had not been decided in the order of reference, and without such a decision the case could not be disposed of; and as to that point, that the statement of account, not being signed by the defendant, did not fall within the terms of art. 64 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877. Held by GARTH, C.J., and TOTTENHAM, J.—That the Division Bench, having held that the transaction afforded no basis for a suit, had disposed of the case, and the question referred was therefore immaterial. *DUKHI SAHU v. 5. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 617—Final decree or order.—A Munsif, being of opinion that he had no jurisdiction to entertain a particular suit, made an order returning the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. An appeal was preferred, under s. 588 of the Civil Procedure Code, to the District Judge, who, entertaining doubts upon the question of jurisdiction, referred the matter to the High Court under s. 617. Held that, inasmuch as the order of the Munsif was not a final decree in the suit, and any order of the Judge in appeal disposing of the plea of jurisdiction would not amount to a "final" decree within the meaning of s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code, the High Court had not jurisdiction to entertain the reference. RAM-PRUL v. 7. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 617—Stay of execution—Amount of security required on granting stay of execution, Question as to.—The defendant in a redemption suit, against whom a decree had been passed, appealed to the High Court, which on his application granted the usual stay of execution pending the appeal, upon security being given by him. The Subordinate Judge, feeling doubt as to whether the actual value of the property or the value stated in the plaint should be regarded in fixing the security, referred the case to the High Court under s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Held, even assuming that section to apply to a proceeding of this kind under s. 647, that no reference would lie under s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code. The question as to the amount of the security was a question relating to execution as contemplated by s. 244 of the Code, and therefore an order determining that question would be appealable under s. 2 of the Code. ISHWARGAR v. [4 C. W. N., 389]

9. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 617—Pleader—Professional conduct.—S. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) does not authorize a reference, except on a point arising in a litigation between parties in a suit, or appeal, or in a matter wherein the Court is called on to adjudicate, that is, to pronounce on the opposite pretensions of contending parties. A pleader was fined Rs 25 by a second class Subordinate Judge for refusing to act on behalf of his client after receipt of retaining fee. On appeal, the District Judge referred the matter to the High Court under s. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). Held that the inquiry into the pleader's professional conduct was of a disciplinary, and not litigious, character. The fact that an appeal lay from the Subordinate Judge to the District Judge did not make it litigious. In such an enquiry no reference could properly be made under s. 617 of Act XIV of 1882. YESHWANT NARAYAN ADARKAR v. DESOUZA. I. L. R., 12 Bom., 78

11. ——— Civil Procedure Code, s. 646B—Reference by District Judge of proceedings in Small Cause Court attacked for want of jurisdiction.—Before a District Court can make a reference under s. 646B of the Civil Procedure Code, it must be of opinion that the subordinate Court has erroneously held upon the point of jurisdiction in regard to the particular suit before it, and that therefore the matter is one in which the interference of the High Court should be sought. The word "shall" in s. 646B, cl. (1), is not mandatory, but directory. MADAN GOPAL v. BHAGWAN DAS [I. L. R., 11 All., 304

12. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 646B—Reference where appeal lies to lower Court—Case in which jurisdiction of Small Cause Court is doubted.—A suit to recover a sum of money as payable to the plaintiff under an award which was contested was filed in a subordinate Court on the small cause side. The Subordinate Judge returned the plaint, being of opinion that the suit was not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. The plaint was then presented in the Court of the District Munsif as an ordinary suit, but the District Munsif returned it on the ground that the suit was cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. The plaintiff then applied to the District Judge to submit the record for the orders of the High Court. Held that the District Judge was bound to submit the record to the High Court under s. 646B of the Code of Civil Procedure on the requisition of the plaintiff, although the plaintiff might have appealed to the District Court against the order of the District Munsif. *SIMSON v. 2. ——— Power to refer—Power of Joint Magistrate—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 434.—A Joint Magistrate of a district had no power to make a reference to the High Court under s. 434 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Such references can be made only by the Sessions Judge or by the Magistrate of a district. QUEEN v. CHOORAMONI SANT . . . 14 W. R., Cr., 25

3. ——— Power of Magistrate—Case heard by Sessions Judge.—One of two prisoners, who were tried jointly before a Bench of Magistrates on the complaint of the District Magistrate, appealed to the Sessions Judge and was acquitted. The District Magistrate thereupon, under ss. 296 and 297 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, transmitted the proceedings in the case to the High Court, and asked that they might be quashed on the ground that there had been a failure of justice.

4. ———— Power of Magistrate—Order of Appellate Court—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), ss. 296, 296, and 297.—A District Magistrate, being of opinion that the Sessions Judge had on appeal improperly set aside a conviction made by a Cantonment Magistrate, referred the matter to the High Court under s. 297 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Held that the Magistrate had no power to make such a reference. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF RAM LAL. EMPRESS v. RAM LAL . I. L. R., 8 Calc., 875

5. ———— Practice—Criminal Procedure Code, s. 438—Reference by District Magistrate of proceeding of Sessions Judge.—A District Magistrate who considers that there has been a miscarriage of justice in the Court of Session should not report the case to the High Court for orders under s. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but should communicate with the Public Prosecutor as to the case in which he thinks such miscarriage has occurred, and invite his assistance to move the Court with regard to it. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 7. ———— Criminal Procedure Code (1882), s. 438—Power of the District Magistrate to question the propriety of finding and sentence by the Sessions Judge—Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 435 and 439.—The power conferred by s. 438 read with s. 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code upon a District Magistrate to make a reference to the High Court refers clearly to a "proceeding before any inferior Criminal Court." By the words "or otherwise" in s. 438 the Legislature never intended to give to a Magistrate the power to question the propriety of a judgment or sentence by a superior criminal authority; nor by the use of the words "or which has been reported for orders" in s. 439 could it have been intended that such report might be made by an inferior criminal authority with respect to a proceeding by a superior authority. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. Court a case in which the Sessions Court has, under s. 128 of the Code, refused to confirm his order under s. 118. 9. ———— Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 307—Duty of Sessions Judge as to referring cases tried with a jury.—The discretionary power to refer cases conferred on Sessions Judges by Criminal Procedure Code, s. 307, should always be exercised when the Judge thinks that the verdict is not supported by the evidence. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 10. ———— Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 307—Reference necessary for ends of justice.—A reference under s. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code should be made when the Judge is "clearly of opinion" that he should do so for the ends of justice. SURJA KURMI v. QUEEN-EMPRESS [I. L. R., 25 Calc., 555]

11. ———— Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, s. 269, cl. 3, and s. 307—Trial by jury of an offence triable with the aid of assessors.—The accused was tried by a jury on four charges: (1) forgery, (2) using a forged document, (3) criminal misappropriation, and (4) attempting to use a forged document as genuine. The jury returned a unanimous verdict of "not guilty" on all the charges. The Sessions Judge agreed with the jury in their verdict on the 1st, 2nd, and 4th charges, but he differed from them on the 3rd charge, which was criminal misappropriation. This offence was not triable by a jury, and ought therefore, under cl. 3 of s. 269 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), to have been tried by the Sessions Judge with the aid of the jurors as assessors. Nevertheless, the Judge took the verdict of the jury upon this charge, and, differing from it, referred the case to the High Court under s. 307 of the Code. Held that, although the procedure of the Sessions Judge was irregular, the trial by jury must be accepted as legal, and the case as one that could be referred to the High Court under s. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. JADUB DAS* . . . I. L. R., 27 Cal., 295 [4 C. W. N., 129]

15. ——— Question as to validity of commitment—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 296—Power of Sessions Court to set aside commitment.—The Court of Session has no power to set aside a commitment made under its direction. If it doubts the legality of the commitment, it should make a reference to the High Court. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF HASSAN RAZA KHAN [7 N. W., 211]

16. ——— Order contrary to law—Sessions Judge—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 296.—Where a Sessions Judge considers that a judgment or order is contrary to law, or that the punishment is too severe, he should report the proceedings to the High Court in the manner prescribed by the circular order of 15th July 1868, which is applicable to references under s. 296 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1872. *RAJKISTO PAUL v. 17. ——— Question of jurisdiction pending trial—Reference under s. 296 of Act X of 1872 by Court of Session.—A Court of Session, after it had asked the assessors their opinion in a case which was being tried by it, suspended the trial of the case and made a reference to the High Court under s. 296 of Act X of 1872, on a question of jurisdiction which had arisen in the trial of the case. Held that it was not intended that that section should be so used, and the Court of Session must dispose of such question itself. EMPERESS OF INDIA v. BHUP SINGH . . . I. L. R., 2 All., 771

18. ——— Question of sufficiency of evidence—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 434.—S. 434 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1861, contemplated reference to the High Court in cases where the sentence or order is contrary to law. A case where a Magistrate had convicted of an offence on the evidence of one witness whom he considered credible was held not a proper subject of reference to the High Court. QUEEN v. BINDU [8 W. 19. ——— Power of High Court on reference—Criminal Procedure Code, 1883, s. 434.—The power exercised by a Court sitting as a Court to decide questions of law reserved in criminal cases under s. 434 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1883) is the power of review, and the Court is a Court of Reference and Revision. *QUEEN-EMPERESS v. He accordingly sent it to the Senior Assistant Magistrate of Berhampore; the accused was convicted, but he appealed to the Sessions Judge, who held that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to try it, but reversed the conviction on the merits. The Government did not appeal against the acquittal of the accused, but the District Magistrate referred to the High Court the question whether the Magistrate had jurisdiction. Held, on the reference, that it was not a case for the interference of the High Court, because (1) it was not shown that the Magistrate had acted without jurisdiction; (2) Government had not appealed against the acquittal by the Sessions Judge who had tried and determined the question of jurisdiction. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. BANGA RAU . . . I. L. R., 15 Mad., 36

22. ——— Illegality in proceedings—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 434.—The Court can only interfere under s. 434, Code of Criminal Procedure, when there is some illegality in the proceedings of a lower Court. QUEEN v. JOY KISHEN LALL . . . 12 W. R., Cr., 46

MANIA DAYAL* . . . I. L. R., 10 Bom., 497

24. ——— Criminal Procedure Code, s. 307—Powers of High Court under s. 307—Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 418, 423 (d).—No trial can be, legally speaking, concluded until judgment and sentence are passed, and the trial of a case referred by a Sessions Judge to the High Court under s. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code remains open for the High Court to conclude and complete, either by maintaining the verdict of the jury and causing judgment of acquittal to be recorded, or by setting aside the verdict of acquittal, and causing conviction and sentence to be entered against the accused. The provisions of s. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code are not in any way cut down by ss. 418 and 423; and the High Court has power, under s. 307, to interfere with the verdict of the jury where the verdict is perverse or obtuse, and the ends of justice require that such perverse finding should be set right. MCCARTHY* [I. L. R., 9 All., 420]

25. ————— Question as to credibility of witnesses—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 434.—S. 434 gave the High Court no power to interfere in a case where the difference of opinion between the Magistrate and the Judge was as to the credibility of witnesses. The proper mode of raising the question as to the propriety of the order would be by a regular suit against the Government. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF GHUMUNDEN SINGH

28. ————— Taking up on reference case where sentence of imprisonment had expired.—Where the imprisonment awarded on a summary conviction before a Magistrate had already expired, the High Court declined to go into the case on a reference from the Sessions Judge, because it would be no advantage to the prisoner to do so, and because, if the Magistrate's proceedings were quashed, the prisoner would be put to the risk of being tried again for the offence with which he had been charged. *KOPIL DOLAI v. Reformatory Schools Act (VIII of 1897), s. 1, cl. 2, 3, and s. 8—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 3 and s. 399—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 318.—The accused was convicted of the offence under s. 457 of the Penal Code by the Deputy Magistrate of Barisal, who found that the accused was a boy of fourteen or fifteen years, decidedly under sixteen, and passed the following order: "I find Ahmad Ali, boy, guilty of house-breaking by night for the purpose of committing theft, and instead of being imprisoned in the jail under s. 457 of the Penal Code, I direct, under s. 399 of the Criminal Procedure Code and s. 7 of Act V of 1876, that Ahmad Ali be confined in the Calcutta Reformatory for two years for training in some branch of useful industry." Held that the order could not be sustained under s. 7 of Act V of 1876, as that Act had been repealed before the date of the order and the commission of the offence, nor under s. 8 of Act VIII of 1897, as the order does not comply with the provisions of the latter Act. Held further that, s. 318 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872) having been repealed by s. 2 of Act V of 1876, the corresponding s. 399 of present Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) must also be held by virtue of s. 3 of the Code to have been repealed in the provinces, including Bengal, to which Act V of 1876 was extended. The repeal of a statute repealing another statute does not revive the repealed statute. The law in India, as embodied in s. 7 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897), is the same as the law in England. Queen-Empress v. Madasami, I. L. R., 12 Mad., 94, and Queen-Empress v. Manaji, I. s. 8—Magistrate's duty under that section to ascertain the prisoner's age—Nature of proceeding under that section—High Court's power of revising such proceeding—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 4 and 485—Judicial proceeding.—A Magistrate acting under s. 8 of the Reformatory Schools Act (V of 1876) is bound to ascertain the age of the prisoner, and, in accordance with that finding, to direct the confinement in a reformatory according to the rules made under s. 22 of the Act. It is not sufficient for the Magistrate merely to find that the prisoner is under a particular age. Under s. 8 of the Act, evidence may be taken by the Magistrate as to the age of the prisoner; and as the proceeding of the Magistrate involves the alteration of a sentence after the exercise of judicial discretion, such proceeding is clearly a judicial proceeding within the meaning of ss. 4 and 485 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). The High Court is therefore competent to exercise its revisional jurisdiction in such cases. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. MANAJI

The proper course for the Magistrate to have adopted with reference to the above-mentioned rules was to have ascertained, as near as might be, the exact age of the offender and sentenced him to a specified period of detention, which should be that elapsing between his conviction and the attainment by him of the age of eighteen years. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ——— ss. 8, 9, 11—Recording of and finding on evidence as to age of offender—Jurisdiction of Sessions Judge as a Court of appeal to pass order for detention in reformatory school in lieu of imprisonment.—A Sessions Judge can on appeal from a Magistrate pass an order for detention in a reformatory school in supersession of an order for imprisonment. But he can only do so when he has before him evidence as to the age of the accused, otherwise he must take evidence under s. 11 of the Act, and record a finding stating the age, and then with reference to such finding pass a sentence within the terms of the Reformatory Schools Act and the rules made by the Local Government thereunder. *DEPUTY LEGAL REMEMBRANCE v. A boy of about 9 years of age was found in the grounds of the residence of the Commissioner of Patna at 3 A.M. in the morning with a brass lota in his hand. He was tried summarily and, without any preliminary inquiry as to the age of the boy being made, was sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment, or in lieu thereof to be detained in a reformatory school for seven years. Held the accused did not come within the definition of "youthful offenders" as given in the rules framed by the Local Government under s. 8 of the Reformatory Schools Act, and the offence of the accused being his first offence, the case should have been dealt with under s. 81 of the Act. It is not that a Magistrate is under no circumstances competent to find from the appearance of a person convicted by him that he is a youthful offender, but it is generally desirable that there should be some reliable evidence on the point, and especially when it is necessary to determine the period of detention. The age of the accused being under twelve years, the Magistrate should, considering the provisions of s. 83 of the Penal Code, have found that the accused had attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge of the nature and consequences of his act. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. in appeal or revision with an order for detention in a reformatory school passed in substitution for transportation or imprisonment when such order is made without jurisdiction and is not an order warranted by Act VIII of 1897. S. 16 of Act VIII of 1897 only precludes the interference of a superior Court with the original Court's order so far as it (1) determines the age of a youthful offender or (2) directs the substitution of detention in a reformatory school for transportation or imprisonment, where such substitution is not made without jurisdiction or is not otherwise illegal, having regard to the provisions of the Act. *Queen-Empress v. REGIMENTAL DEBTS ACT—concluded.

letter from the president of the committee of adjustment, the Bank paid over all the moneys of the deceased officer in their hands to his widow. In a suit brought against the Bank by the first plaintiff (the granddaughter of the deceased officer), who had taken out letters of administration to his estate on 6th June 1873, and her husband, the second plaintiff, to recover two-thirds of the moneys so paid by the Bank to the widow, with interest,—Held that, on the payment by the widow of the preferential charges, the whole of the property remaining in the hands of the committee was "surplus" within the meaning of s. 5 of the Regimental Debts Act of 1863, and that, assuming the Agra Bank at Bombay to be "within the command" within the meaning of s. 7, the moneys of the deceased officer in the hands of the Bank, as being part of such "surplus," should have been dealt with by the committee in accordance with the provisions of s. 10 of the Regimental Debts Act, 1863, and cl. 17 of the Royal Warrant, and should have been remitted to the Military Secretary to Government. Held also that the Military Secretary to Government had no authority to pay or order the payment of such "surplus" to any person except in accordance with the provisions of s. 12 of the Regimental Debts Act of 1863. Held also that s. 8 of the Regimental Debts Act of 1863 did not render it incumbent on the widow, for the purpose of ousting the jurisdiction of the committee of adjustment, to pay the preferential charges before the committee had taken any steps under s. 7. The true construction of s. 8 is that, on payment of the preferential charges, the committee of adjustment must be regarded as functi officio, except for the purpose of reporting, and should make over whatever property they have, which comes under the denomination of "surplus," in accordance with the terms of s. 10. Held also that the letter of the president of the committee of adjustment was a sufficient notice to the Bank that the committee were functi officio, and that the period had arrived when the civil law stepped in to regulate the case. Quære—Whether the Bank could be held to be a "person" within the meaning of s. 22 of the Regimental Debts Act of 1863; but even if it could,—Held that the Bank were not protected by that section, the payment by them not having been made to a "representative" as defined in the Act. Held also that the Bank were not protected by s. 35 of the Regimental Debts Act, the payment not having been made "in pursuance" of the Act and the carelessness of the Bank in paying the money having been such as to amount to positive negligence, and debar them from pleading that they acted under the bond fide belief that the payment was made in pursuance of the Act. *Pemberton v. REGISTRAR OF HIGH COURT—continued.

Registrar of the High Court has authority, when so directed by an order of Court, to execute a conveyance on behalf of a party refusing to do so, so as to pass his estate, if any, but has no authority to bind him by entering into any covenants on his behalf. The power of the Registrar to execute such a conveyance rests upon statutory authority. General covenants for title and quiet enjoyment extend to the case of a defect known to the purchaser at the time of the sale, unless the intention of the parties that they should not do so is clearly expressed in the covenants themselves. "Conveyance," as used in rule 436 (Belchambers' Rules and Orders) means such an instrument as may be necessary to transfer the estate, if he has any, belonging to the person on behalf of whom the Registrar executes the transfer to the purchaser. Circumstances under which a pardanashin lady will be relieved from liability under covenants contained in a conveyance executed by her. D, an heir of one X, a deceased Hindu lady, sold and conveyed to M, in March 1878, a moiety in certain premises belonging to the estate of X. Subsequently a decree was made for partition of the estate left by X in a suit to which D, A, R, G, and S were parties, and an order was made in that suit directing the premises, of which D had so sold a moiety, to be sold by the Registrar, and the parties were directed to join in the conveyance, the Registrar being directed to approve and execute the same on behalf of G, who was an infant. At the sale, the plaintiff purchased the premises, and thereafter D refused to execute the conveyance, which included the usual covenants for title and quiet enjoyment. A summons was thereupon taken out against him, and an order was made directing the Registrar to execute the conveyance on his behalf. The conveyance was then executed in September 1885 by A, S, and R, and by the Registrar on behalf of D and the minor G. In a suit instituted by M under the conveyance of 1878, the Court held that he was entitled to possession, as against the plaintiffs, of the moiety of the premises covered by his conveyance. The plaintiff therefore brought a suit against D, A, R, G, and S to recover damages for breach of the covenants for title and quiet enjoyment. It was not found that R had any good independent advice in the matter, or that she clearly understood the nature of the contract she was entering into, and the liabilities she was taking upon herself. Held that, although the Registrar had authority to execute the conveyance on behalf of D and G, he had no authority to enter into the covenants on their behalf, and that the suit should be dismissed as against them. Held also that, having regard to the position of R, the suit should also be dismissed as against her. *RAM CHUNDEE DUTT v. Case in which the title sought to be enforced did not fall within these rules. KALLY DOSS SEAL v. NOBIN CHUNDER DOSS [I. L. R., 14 Calc., 518]

4. — Compensation to purchaser for deficiency in area of land—Conditions of sale.—At a Registrar's sale held on 13th June 1895 a property described as "Lot No. 11, formerly Lot No. 21, Emambarree Lane, containing by estimation 8 cottahs, be the same a little more or less," was sold to the applicant. One of the conditions of sale was that the purchaser would not be entitled to any compensation. On the 10th July the purchaser applied for and obtained an order to pay the balance of the purchase-money into Court, and for confirmation of the sale. Subsequently the purchaser caused the property to be measured, and discovered that it consisted only of 5 cottahs 13 chittaks and 38 sq. ft., and he accordingly applied for compensation in respect of the deficiency. The purchase-money was still in the hands of the Court at the time of the application. Held that the proviso in the conditions of sale applied only to small or unimportant errors and misstatements, and not to a deficiency in measurement of a substantial character; and that in respect of the latter the purchaser was entitled to compensation out of the purchase-money in Court, although he had obtained an order for confirmation of the sale. Whitmore v. Whitmore, L. R., 8 Eq., 603, followed. KISSORY MOHAN ROY v. KALI CHARAN GHOSH [I. C. W. N., 106]

5. — Sale notification—Boundaries, Rectification of—Compensation—Annulment of sale.—In an application by a purchaser for rectification of boundaries or annulment of sale, where such rectification would involve the inclusion within his boundaries of a cookroom, which according to the sale notification was included within the boundaries of another lot purchased by another person, but which, according to the evidence, was always included in the lot purchased by the applicant and which the applicant was led to believe was included in his lot,—Held that in determining what the property is which is purchased at Registrar's sale one has to look at the sale notification the description of the property and the boundaries therein given. It is therefore impossible to determine in the present application what were the boundaries of the property purchased by the applicant. That in a proceeding of this kind an application for rectification of boundaries cannot be entertained, and the best course is to annul the sale. ADMINISTRATOR GENERAL OF BENGAL v. He petitioned the Civil Court, under s. 55, to set aside these decrees, on the ground that the bonds were executed on consideration of something to be done by the obligee, who had wholly failed to perform his part. The Judge dismissed the petitions, because he thought the matter was a more proper one for investigation in a regular suit. His successor dismissed the suit when brought, because, in his opinion, it did not lie. Held on appeal (by the majority of the Court) that no suit lay. The effect of ss. 52 to 55 was to make a decree under them of precisely the same validity as any other decree, to make it enforceable by the same process, but to render it impeachable on the special grounds referred to in s. 55. Held also that the matters alleged were not such as, if proved, would have justified the setting aside of the decrees. The special circumstances must be such as to show a vice in the mode in which the contract to submit to decree and the special registration were obtained, and an infirmity in the original obligation will not do. SINIA TEVAR v. RANGASAMI AYYANGER 7 Mad., 112

3. ————— Right to sue to cancel deed and enforce it.—The powers conferred on the Courts under the Registration Act, 1866, for enforcement by process of execution of the payment of a bond are not inconsistent with the right to sue to cancel and annul the deed as fraudulent. SEERAM v. A decree had been made by consent, excluding the lands now sued for. The defendant's case was that the lands now claimed, together with those decreed by consent, had been made the subject of a compromise of which the terms had been stated in two written agreements not registered. Also that, according to the compromise, each of the parties was to take a moiety of the whole estate. Esah had obtained possession; but the decree was limited to the part of the estate for which the prior suit, then disposed of, was brought; and only one of the agreements—that one which related to the lands then in suit—was presented to, and accepted by, the Court which made the consent decree. Held that this agreement had a different effect from the other one, as it constituted a step in a judicial proceeding and did not require registration. The order was pronounced in terms of it. But as regarded the lands now in suit, excluded as they had been from the decree in the former suit, the defendant's title to them had been left to stand or fall by the other unregistered document. The latter by the Registration Act, 1877, conferred no title, and this defence failed. PRANAL ANNI v. LAKSHMI ANNI. I. L. R., 22 Mad., 508 [L. R., 26 I. A., 101 3 C. W. N., 485]

(b), of the Registration Act (III of 1877) does not render a passage in a will inadmissible in evidence if the words of it do not purport or operate to extinguish an interest in the present or in future, but state only past facts. It further recited that Rs 5,000 was due to A on the mortgage, and that A had, at C's request, agreed to assign it to B. By the operative part, A, in consideration of Rs 5 paid to A by B and "in consideration of the premises," assigned the mortgage to B. Held that the consideration for the deed of assignment was not merely Rs 5 paid to A, but the assignee's agreement to withdraw the suit if A assigned the mortgage to him upon the instrument; that the money value of the latter part of the consideration was the amount covered by the stamp put by the parties themselves; and as it exceeded Rs 100, the deed of assignment was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration (s. 17 of Act VIII of 1871). *NAGO KANATURIA v. 14. — Agreement relating to family arrangement—Valuation for purpose of registration.—Where a document was in the nature of a family arrangement, and drawn up mainly for the purpose of settling a widow's maintenance, though some right in immoveable property was created or declared by such instrument, and it was proved that the actual value of the whole of the immoveable property mentioned in the document exceeded Rs 100, but there was no evidence to show that the value of the widow's right exceeded that sum,—Held that, for the purpose of registration under Act XX of 1866, the actual value of the whole immoveable property named in the document must not be taken to be the value of the right so created or declared. *NILAYA KOM BACHAPPA v. 15. — Agreement to prevent acquisition of easement—Document not creating, etc., right in immoveable property—Chance of acquiring easement—Immoveable property.—The chance of acquiring a right to light and air is not immoveable property within the meaning of the Registration Act, nor can a pecuniary value be put upon it. A document, therefore, which limits or extinguishes the chance of acquiring such an easement does not require registration. SULTAN NAWAZ JUNG v. RUSTOMJI NANABHOY. [I. L. R., 20 Bom., 704]

16. — Change of name in Government records—Mortgage or conditional sale—Subsequent agreement to re-transfer land in Government records on payment of debt—Document creating a right in land.—In 1877, the plaintiff, being indebted to the defendant, transferred certain land to the defendant's name in the Government records. In July 1879 the defendant executed the following document to the plaintiff reciting the previous transfer and agreeing to re-transfer the land to the plaintiff's name on the 12th July 1880, if the debt which would then be due should be paid off: "In the village of Berhampur is your (plaintiff's) field, Survey No. 146, measuring 5 acres 3 gunthas, bearing assessment Rs 16. You (plaintiff) have got it transferred to our name. That field therefore stands in our (defendants') name in the Government records. You owe a debt to us. On account of that debt, you have transferred it to our name. . . . The field shall be retransferred to your name when you repay the said debt to me. to me. And a stamp paper was purchased at the time of the transfer for the execution of this agreement, but no agreement was then passed. This agreement is therefore this day passed to you when the lease is executed. And you owe me (a) debt bearing interest. I will pay out of my pocket the expenses to be incurred at present in cultivating the field. The debt due to me would in all amount to R100. If you repay all these rupees due to me till the Vaishakh Shudh 6th, Samvat 1986, I will take them and transfer the field to your name. And if you fail to pay (them) till Vaishakh Shudh 4th, you will have no claim whatever to the said field. I shall not take the rupees after the 4th (chauth), nor shall I give (or transfer) the field to you. I shall lease the field to any one I like without keeping any claim of you as regards cultivation, manure, and hedge. You have no claim or right whatever.

This document was not registered. The plaintiff brought this suit to redeem the land, alleging that it had been mortgaged to the defendant, and that the debt had been paid off. The defendant contended that the transaction in 1877 was not a mortgage, but a sale of the land to him, and that the document of July 1879 was an agreement to resell it to the plaintiff, which was not admissible in evidence, as it was not registered. Held that the document of the 11th July 1879 did not require registration. It created no rights in land, but only amounted to a personal covenant to effect a mutation of names in the Government books when the debt due by the plaintiff was satisfied. PATEL RANODH MORAR v. BHIKABHAI DEVIDAS . . . I. L. R., 21 Bom., 704

17. Document providing for payment of hereditary allowance—Interest in immovable property—Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 3—Bombay General Clauses Act (Bom. Act III of 1886).—Plaintiffs sued in the Court of Small Causes at Poona to recover R400 for arrears alleged to be payable to them under an agreement by the defendant's father to pay R150 per annum, of which R50 were for maintenance of plaintiffs' mother, and the residue was to be applied towards defraying the expenses of a temple. The terms of the agreement showed that it was intended that the payment for the expenses of the temple should be continued in perpetuity. The Judge dismissed the suit, holding that, being for a hereditary allowance, it was a claim for immovable property, and came within the meaning of ss. 3 and 17 of the Registration Act, and that the document creating it required registration, and, not being registered, was inadmissible in evidence. On application by the plaintiffs to the High Court under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887).—Held, reversing the decree, that the document did not require registration, as it was not an instrument purporting or operating to create or declare an interest in immovable property within the meaning of s. 17, or create an hereditary allowance in the sense in which that expression is used in s. 3 of the Registration Act. VISHNU GANESH JOSHI v. 18. Bond creating charge on immovable property—Larger sum payable on contingency.—The words in s. 17 of the Registration Act (VIII of 1871), "present or future," "vested or contingent," point, not to the value or its ascertainment, but to the right or interest in the land which is to be created as a security. If the charge or interest created is of a value less than R100, registration is needless. NARASAYYA CHETTI v. GURUVAPPA CHETTI . . . I. L. R., 1 Mad., 378

19. Valuation of right, title, and interest created by mortgage.—The value of the right, title, or interest created by a mortgage is estimated by the amount of the principal money thereby secured. The words "or in future" in s. 17 of Act XX of 1866 and s. 17 of Act VIII of 1871 have reference to estates in remainder or in reversion in immovable property, or to estates otherwise deferred in enjoyment, and not to interest payable in future on principal moneys lent on the security of immovable property. NANA BIN LAKSHMAN v. ANANT BABAJI . . . I. L. R., 2 Bom., 353

20. Bond creating interest in land—Mode of testing value.—For the purpose of registration, the value of the interest created in immovable property by a mortgage-bond is that sum by the payment of which the interest could be determined. TIYAGARAJA PADYACHI v. RAMANUJAM PILLAI . . . I. L. R., 6 Mad., 422

21. and s. 49—Mortgage—The value of the interest created by a mortgage of immovable property is estimated, for the purposes of the Registration Act of 1871, not by the amount of the principal money thereby secured, but by the amount of such money and the interest payable thereon. Consequently, a bond, dated the 9th August 1873, which charged certain immovable property with the payment on the 31st May 1874 of R98, and interest thereon at the rate of one per cent. per mensem, should have been registered. Darshan Singh v. Hanwanta, I. L. R., 1 All., 274, followed. Nana bin Lakshman v. Anant Babaji, I. L. R., 2 Bom., 353, differed from. RAJPATI SINGH v. RAM SUKHI KAUR . . . I. L. R., 2 All., 40

22. Bond hypothecating immovable property.—The registration of a bond hypothecating immovable property to secure the repayment of R95-14-0, with interest at eighteen per cent. per annum, the principal to be paid in four annual instalments, three of R23-5-4, and the fourth of R25-14-0, and the whole of the interest to be paid on the date of the last instalment, without any provision that the debtor should be at liberty to anticipate the payment of any instalment, is compulsory, inasmuch as the lowest sum which the debtor could compel the creditor to accept is in excess of R100. The proper test for determining the value of the interest created by a mortgage for the purpose of registration is the amount of the least sum recoverable, and not the consideration for the bond. Although an unregistered mortgage-bond which creates an interest in land in excess of R100 is of no effect as a mortgage, —Admissibility in evidence of documents compulsorily registrable, but unregistered.—A kararnama (agreement), dated 11th day of June 1885, was passed by A to B to the following effect: "As my father S is dead, it has been arranged that I should succeed to his estate Part of this estate at Vagoda, consisting of a house, fields, cattle, and a cart, has been given into your possession for use and enjoyment. The reason thereof is that you have undertaken to pay Rs450 found due on an adjustment of khata from my father to G. I am unable to pay off this debt; and so you have been put into possession of this property. I shall pass to you a sale-deed in respect of this property, and shall transfer the fields to your name from the year 1888-89." Held that the kararnama required registration. It did not fall within the exception provided for by cl. (h) of s. 17 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). It was not a document which merely created a right to demand another document. It created as between the parties to it a charge in the nature of a mortgage. The document of itself declared a right, and the mention of an intention to execute a deed of sale made no difference. An unregistered mortgage bond for one hundred rupees and upwards may be admissible in evidence to prove the simple debt or a personal obligation, but it is inadmissible in evidence to prove any right to the property affected by it. *VANI v. 29. — Document compulsorily registrable—Valuation—Least sum payable—Sum repayable before expiry of stated term—Principal sum without interest.—A charge on certain property to secure Rs50 was given by the jennmis in favour of defendant No. 1, who held a kanom on the property granted three years previously, containing the following terms: "This amount of Rs50, together with the customary interest thereon, will be added to the kanom amount when after the expiry of the period of demise of the paramba a renewal is effected or the paramba is caused to be surrendered. The jennman right over the said paramba has been mortgaged to you for this Rs50 and the interest thereon." The document was not registered. It was contended that the document was one compulsorily registrable under s. 17 of the Registration Act, 1877, inasmuch as payment under it was postponed for at least nine years (i.e., the balance of the term granted by the kanom), by the end of which period the accumulations of interest would have amounted to Rs54 in addition to the principal sum of Rs50, making Rs104 in all. Held that the document did not contain a clear expression of intention that the sum of Rs50 was not repayable except at the end of the previous kanom term. Full effect would and could be given to the words by construing them to mean no more than that, in the event of the amount remaining unpaid when the kanom became redeemable, the Rs50 with interest thereon should be treated as if it were part of the kanom amount so as to entitle the appellant to insist on redemption upon payment of such amount in addition to what might be found due under the kanom. And that the least sum payable being the test as to whether a document is compulsorily registrable, the document need not be registered under s. 17 of the Registration Act, 1877. Per O'FARRELL and MICHELL, J.J., that under cl. (b) of s. 17 of the Registration Act, 1877, only the principal amount secured should be taken into consideration. KUNHI AMMA v. AHMED HAJI [I. L. R., 23 Mad., 105]

30. Mortgage—Suit on unregistered bond charging immovable property.—The obligor of a bond bearing date the 20th January 1873 agreed to pay the obligee Rs 80, together with interest on that amount at the rate of 2 per cent. per month, between the 2nd April 1874 and the 1st May 1874, and hypothecated immovable property as collateral security for such payment. On the 15th February 1879 the obligee sued the obligor on the bond to recover Rs 196-8-0, being the principal amount and interest, from the hypothecated property. Held by the majority of the Full Bench (STUART, C.J., dissenting) that, for the purpose of registration, the value of the right assigned by the bond to the obligee in the property should be estimated by the amount secured for certain by the hypothecation, and, that amount exceeding Rs 100, the bond should have been registered. Per STUART, C.J.—That, for that purpose, the value of that right should be estimated by the principal amount of the bond, and, that amount being under Rs 100, the bond did not require to be registered. *Nana bin Lakshman v. 31. and s. 49—Occupancy tenancy—"Immovable property"—Mortgage—Act I of 1868 (General Clauses Act), s. 2 (5).—The obligee of a bond, dated the 29th October 1869, sued to recover the amount due thereunder from the property hypothecated therein. By the terms of the bond the obligor agreed to pay the sum of Rs 75, with interest at 2 per cent. per mensem, on the 12th May 1873. The amount thus secured exceeded Rs 200. The property mortgaged was the tenant holding of the obligor. Held that the interest of a tenant in his holding was right or interest to or in immovable property; that consequently such bond, which affirmed as a security a right of which the value, estimated by the amount secured, exceeded Rs 100, ought to have been registered; that being unregistered it could not affect the "immovable property comprised therein" or "be received in evidence of any transaction affecting" the same:

32. Bond charging immovable property—Interest.—The obligors of a bond for the payment of money charging land agreed to pay the principal amount, Rs 99, within six months after the execution of the bond, and to pay interest every month on the principal amount at the rate of 2 per cent., and that, in the event of default of payment of the interest in any month, the whole amount mentioned in the bond should become due at once. There was no stipulation preventing the obligors from repaying the loan at any time within the six months after which it was reclaimable. Held that the only amount certainly secured by the bond was the principal, and the bond did not therefore need to be registered. AHMAD BAKSH v. GOBINDI [I. L. R., 2 All., 216]

33. Bond—Mortgage.—The immovable property charged by a bond payable by instalments, dated the 17th December 1866, was charged for both principal and interest, and the first instalment was payable within three years from the date of the bond with the accumulated interest, and the amount then becoming due exceeded Rs 100. Held in a suit on the bond, that it was an instrument creating an interest in immovable property of the value of Rs 100 and upwards, and under s. 17 of Act XX of 1866 required registration. *Rajpati Kuar v. 34. Mortgage of immovable property—Registered and unregistered documents.—Held by the majority of the Full Bench (STRAIGHT and OLDFIELD, J.J., dissenting) that the principal sum secured by a mortgage of immovable property is alone to be considered for the purpose of deciding whether the registration of the instrument of mortgage is optional or compulsory under the Registration Act, 1877. The ruling of the Full Bench in Himmat Singh v. Sewa Ram, I. L. R., 3 All., 157, overruled. Held therefore, where an instrument of mortgage by way of conditional sale, dated the 2nd July 1871, secured the payment of a principal sum of Rs 72, with interest at Rs 2 per cent. per mensem, on the 12th May 1873, the whole amount thus secured exceeding Rs 100, that the registration of such instrument was optional and not compulsory. *HABIBULLAH v. 35. Mortgage for sum just under Rs 100 with interest.—Where the plaintiff sued upon a mortgage to secure Rs 98 with interest at Rs 2-3 per month, it was objected that the mortgage was inoperative as being unregistered. Held that the mortgage was one to secure a sum under Rs 100, and did not require registration. *PANCHI DAS v. 36. ———— and s. 18.—N agreed by an instrument in writing called a 'sattah,' in consideration of a loan of ₹99-8-0, that B should have the right of cultivating indigo on certain land from a certain date for a certain period; that if she failed to make over to him any portion of such land, or interfered with his cultivation of any portion of it, she should be responsible in damages for the loss occasioned to B in respect of such default or interference at the rate of ₹40 per bigha, and for the repayment of such loan; "that if she failed to pay, B was at liberty to recover from her person and property; and that, until the conditions of the agreement were fulfilled, she hypothecated her 4-anna share in mouzah B." B sued N upon the "sattah" to recover ₹1,059-6-0, being the amount of such loan and damages, by the sale of such 4-anna share, such suit being founded on a breach of the agreement. Held per STUART, C.J., that, inasmuch as the value relating to the immoveable property hypothecated in the "sattah" was simply ₹99-8-0, without any stipulation as to interest or any other payment by which that sum might be augmented, the damages stipulated for depending upon a contingency which might or might not happen and respecting which nothing could be anticipated at the time of registration, the instrument did not, under Act VIII of 1871, s. 17, require registration. *Darshan Singh v. 48. ———— Assignment of mortgage—Extrinsic evidence—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 91—Title to sue—Amendment of plaint.—An equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds was created on 15th August 1862. In March 1873 the mortgagee, P D, executed an assignment of all his property and of all debts due to him, and all the securities therefor, to the plaintiff. The assignment also contained a power-of-attorney from the mortgagee to the plaintiff, "in the name of the said P D, his executors, etc., but for the sole use and benefit of the said A D (the plaintiff), to ask, demand, sue for, recover, and receive of and from all and every the person or persons liable in that behalf all and every (inter alia) the sum and sums of money and debts hereby assigned or intended so to be or any of them or any part of them, to hold the same unto and to the use and behoof of the said A D, his executors, etc." Some days after the execution of the assignment, the title-deeds, which had been deposited in 1862 with the mortgagee, were handed to the plaintiff, in accordance with the terms of an agreement to that effect contained in the assignment. The deed of assignment was not registered. On 13th August 1874 the plaintiff, as the assignee of the equitable mortgage, sued for foreclosure. The Court of first instance held that, as an assignment, the deed required registration, and that, not being registered, it could not be received in evidence; that under s. 91 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) no evidence, other than that contained in the document itself, could be given to prove the fact of the assignment; and that therefore the plaintiff had failed to show a title to sue as assignee of the equitable mortgage. The Court, however, permitted an amendment of the plaint, by which the plaintiff was described as suing "in his own name and as the constituted attorney of P D," and then allowed the deed of assignment to be put in as evidence of the power thereby conferred on the plaintiff to sue for and recover all debts due to P D, and therefore to maintain the present suit in respect of the equitable mortgage. On appeal.—Held that, if the suit were regarded as the suit of P D, the power-of-attorney contained in the deed did not enable the plaintiff to maintain the suit for P D, inasmuch as it purported to enable the plaintiff to recover the debts mentioned in the deed on his own account only, and not on account of P D; and on the other hand, if the suit were regarded as that of the plaintiff, the Court, by treating the power in the deed as enabling him to recover on his own account, virtually gave to that power the full effect of an assignment, and for that purpose such an assignment, whether legal or equitable, should be registered under ss. 17 and 49 of Act VIII of 1871. The Court, however, being of opinion that there had not been any deliberate intention on the part of the parties to the deed, to evade the law of registration, granted the plaintiff an adjournment of the case, in order to complete his title as an equitable mortgagee, by obtaining, registering, and putting in evidence a fresh assignment to himself from P D. GANPAT PANDURANG v. 49. ———— Deed of assignment showing payment of rent as interest—Admissibility of deed in evidence—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 20—Payment of interest as such—Mortgage—Payment of rents to mortgage in lieu of interest on debt.—By a bond, dated the 15th July 1872, A assigned to B the "vahivat of assessment" of certain lands belonging to him as security for a loan of Rs. 10,000. The bond provided that B should receive the assessment, and after making certain payments should retain the balance in lieu of interest until the principal debt should be repaid. The bond was not registered. The assessment was duly received by B until April 1887. In February 1890, B filed this suit to recover the principal sum from A personally, relinquishing his claim against the land, as the bond was not registered. A pleaded limitation. B contended that the receipt of the assessment in lieu of interest was a payment of "interest as such" within the meaning of s. 20 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and that, the last of such payment having been made within three years before suit, his claim was not barred. Held that the assignment of the "vahivat of assessment" contained in the bond was an assignment of a benefit arising out of immoveable property within the meaning of ss. 17 and 3 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), or else a mortgage; and in either case the bond could not be admitted in evidence, as it was not registered. But it was only by reading the terms of the bond that the Court could gather that the assessment was to be received in lieu of interest. This would be to admit indirectly the provisions of the bond in evidence. Apart from the bond, there was no evidence that the plaintiff (B) had been paid "interest as such" within three years of the filing of the suit by the duly authorized agents of the defendants, and the claim was therefore barred. VENKAJI BABAJI NAIK v. (b) of s. 17 of the Registration Act. ANANDRAO v. JOTI . . . I. L. R., 24 Bom., 615

—continued.

After his death, his sons partitioned the property. In 1857, B, one of the sons, brought a suit in the late Supreme Court to establish the will and to have the trusts carried into execution. The decree in that suit ordered that the portion so dedicated by the testator should be conveyed to N C, B D N, and K R M, as trustees for the idol. In pursuance of this decree, a conveyance was settled by the Master, but it was never executed, the parties having come to an agreement to compromise, and executed a deed to that effect on 15th March 1866. The deed recited that the parties now agreed to compromise certain suits and to execute mutual releases, etc.,

as thereafter declared, and then witnessed that the real property belonging to the idol, which the trustees were entitled to hold under the will, was set forth in a schedule, and that it had been agreed that a conveyance should be executed to the plaintiff and others in trust for the idol, and that the same should be duly registered; provision was then made for the settlement of the dedicated portion, when for more than one year, and extending beyond the term of the turn of worship of any one of the parties; and there was a declaration that all leases, etc., made without consent of the parties should only be valid for the turn of worship of such party; that the rents and profits were to pass to and remain with the party or parties who should for the time being be entitled to the turn of worship; and that a house of worship should be built for the idol on the land mentioned in the schedule: provision was also made for the forfeiture of interest of any party who should renounce the Hindu religion; and it was declared that a certain portion was not to be considered divided as theretofore, but that it belonged to the plaintiff, and was not liable to be sold. Held (reversing the decision of MARBY, J.) that the document was one which required registration under s. 13 of Act XVI of 1864. RAJKUMAR ROY v. P did not pay the purchase-money, and therefore did not get possession. Shortly after the conveyance had been registered, P returned it to D, with an endorsement thereon to the effect that it was returned because P was unable to pay the purchase-money. The right, title, and interest in the house were subsequently attached and sold under a decree obtained against him by the plaintiff. 57. — Endorsement on a sanad returning the sanad to the grantor—Evidence—Admissibility.—The plaintiff sought to attach a certain hak as belonging to his judgment-debtor K. The defendant, who was the original grantor of the hak, pleaded a regrant of the hak to himself. In support of this plea, the defendant produced from his possession the original sanad bearing the following endorsement by K: "You have passed me a receipt for the sanad. I have accordingly given you the ownership of the sanad. Therefore over the said sanad I have no right or title." The defendant offered to put in this endorsement, and also tendered the evidence of K's brother. This evidence was rejected by the Court, on the ground that the endorsement, which had the effect of extinguishing the grant, was not registered. Held that the endorsement did not require registration. It did not itself rescind the grant to K, nor constitute a re-grant to the defendant. It was simply an endorsement returning the sanad to the defendant, and therefore passed no interest in any property. HEERAMDEV DHAENIDHARDEV v. KASHINATH BHASKER. I. L. R., 14 Bom., 472

59. — Letters containing contract—Acknowledgment of receipt of consideration—Evidence Act, s. 91—Oral evidence, Admissibility of—"Instruments."—An advertisement appeared in the Bombay Gazette newspaper of the 9th March 1874, advertising for sale certain moveable and immovable property situate in the village of Angur, near Junnar, in the district of Poona. On reading that advertisement, plaintiff entered into a negotiation with the solicitors of the widow and administratrix of the owner of the said property for the purchase of a certain portion of it. On the 26th May 1874 the plaintiff wrote a letter to the solicitors, offering to purchase the said property for Rs 14,000 on certain conditions, and proposing to pay a deposit of Rs 1,000 as earnest-money if the offer was accepted. On the following day the solicitors informed plaintiff, in writing, that the widow accepted his offer, and requested him to deposit the earnest-money offered by him in his letter. Plaintiff accordingly deposited the earnest-money (Rs 1,000) with the solicitors on the same day, and obtained from them a receipt, bearing a one-anna receipt stamp. The receipt mentioned the money as being in part payment of the sum of Rs 14,000, the amount for which the plaintiff had agreed to purchase the property. Instead of completing the contract of sale with the plaintiff, and putting him in possession of the property, the widow sold it to other persons. In a suit of the nature of a suit for specific performance brought by the plaintiff, as first purchaser, against the widow and the other purchasers to set aside the subsequent sale of the property, and to compel the widow to execute a conveyance thereof to the plaintiff, the following documents were produced and tendered in evidence, viz., the advertisement of the 9th March, the plaintiff's letter of the 26th May (exhibit No. 3), the solicitors' reply (exhibit No. 4), and their receipt of the 27th May 1874 (exhibit No. 5), and it was contended that three of the four documents—viz., exhibits Nos. 3, 4, and 5—required registration under the Registration Act (VIII of 1871), s. 17. Held that the plaintiff's letter (exhibit 3) offering to purchase the property in question, and the letter of acceptance (exhibit 4) written on behalf of the vendor (defendant No. 1) by her attorneys, did not fall within cl. (b) of the 17th section of the Registration Act (VIII of 1871), and were admissible in evidence to prove the contract of sale, although not registered. The acceptance of the plaintiff's offer was conditional on his payment of the Rs 1,000 as earnest-money, and therefore, until that sum was paid, no estate, legal or equitable, in the property passed to the plaintiff. Quære—Whether the letters between the parties (exhibits Nos. 3 and 4), even if they did constitute a complete contract for sale unincumbered by the necessity for the payment of the deposit by way of earnest, could be regarded as

80. — and s. 49—Letters of one partner to another transferring to the latter the share of the former in the assets of the firm, including the mortgages, but not mentioning them—Necessity of registering such letters—The words "document" and "instrument" in the Registration Act.—By two mortgage-bonds, dated respectively 25th July 1866 and 19th September 1870, certain lands were mortgaged to a firm of money-lenders at Khadkala, carrying on business under the style of G and M. There were four partners in the firm, viz., G, M, P, and S. In 1874 G retired from the firm, and wrote three letters the effect of which was to transfer his share in the partnership to P and S. In 1878 the shop was closed, and the partners divided the assets of the firm. The two mortgages fell to the share of S. Subsequently S died, and the plaintiff, his son, inherited his property and took possession of the mortgaged lands. These lands were afterwards attached in execution of a money decree against one of the mortgagors (defendant 1). The plaintiff objected to the attachment, but his objection was disallowed, and the property was sold in execution and purchased by defendants 2 and 3. The plaintiff then filed this suit to establish his rights under the two mortgage-bonds. The defendants contended that the plaintiff had no interest in the mortgages, and was not entitled to sue. The plaintiff relied (inter alia) in support of his title upon the letters (A, B, and C) whereby G had transferred his share in the assets of the firm to his (the plaintiff's) father S. These letters were objected to as inadmissible in evidence, not having been registered. Held that, independently of the letters, there was evidence to show that the plaintiff's father S was a partner in the firm, and that as such partner the mortgages in question fell to his share at the final division of assets. The position of S as a partner being once established, his right to the property followed by operation of law, and no other proof of title was required. Per JANDINA, J.—"To lay down that the three letters in question, which deal generally with the assets, moveable and immoveable, without specifying any particular mortgage or other interest in real property, require registration, would, I incline to think, in the present state of the authorities, go too far. It may be argued that such letters are not 'instruments of gift of immoveable property,' but rather disposals of a share in a partnership of which the business is money-lending and the mortgage securities merely incidental thereto." Per TELANG, J.—"Although a partner's share does not include any specific part of any specific item of the partnership property, still where the partnership is entitled to immoveable property, such share does include an interest in immoveable property, and therefore every instrument operating to create or transfer a right to such share requires to be registered under the Registration Act (III of 1877). It is true that the authorities referred to apply, in terms, only to immoveable property owned by a partnership. But

I am, on the whole, disposed to hold that the principle of those authorities applies to cases where immoveable property is held by a firm not in full proprietorship, but only by right of mortgage. . . Upon the whole I should, if necessary, have been disposed to hold that the letters in question, not being registered, were rightly treated by the Court below as being inadmissible in evidence to prove directly a transfer of the share of G in the partnership to S." Per TELANG, J.—A perusal of various sections of the Registration Act seems to show that the Legislature has used the words "document" and "instrument" interchangeably. JOHARMAL v. 84. — and cl. (c) and s. 49—Unregistered document—Document to contradict witness—Meaning of word "declare" in s. 17 of Act III of 1877—Acknowledgment, Necessity for registration of.—S and B sued their brothers M and V in 1880 for partition of the family property. The defendants pleaded that the property had been partitioned in 1870, and that the various members of the family had been ever since in possession and enjoyment of their respective shares. At the hearing a document was produced by the defendant M, dated the 13th January 1877, which was proved to have been signed by his three brothers, S, B, and V, on the occasion of M's effecting a mortgage of part of the property. This document contained the following words: "Our eldest brother M has built houses and is building new houses on property appertaining to his share To the same we three persons and our heirs and representatives have no interest of any kind whatever. If we or they should prefer any claim, then the same is to be null. This release paper we have duly passed in writing jointly and severally and in sound mind." This document had not been registered, and was therefore inadmissible as evidence of the alleged partition. In cross-examination of the plaintiff B, he was interrogated as to the circumstances under which the mortgage was made by M on the 13th January 1877. He said: "I was present when the mortgage was made, but I was ill in bed. . . . This was on the 18th January 1877. . . . I did not say on that day that I had no claim to the property." He was then shown the above document, and admitted his signature. The document was then tendered in evidence, not as a release, but to contradict the witness. Held that the document was admissible for that purpose, as it was not a document which itself declared a right in immoveable property in the sense intended by s. 17 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). It was an acknowledgment that there had, in time past, been a partition between the brothers who signed it and the defendant M, but it was not itself the instrument of partition. That an acknowledgment of a partition is distinct from the instrument of partition, i- to be gathered from cl. (c) of s. 17 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). Had the terms of cl. (b) of that section been satisfied by a mere acknowledgment, cl. (c) would have been superfluous. Its operation is to require an acknowledgment in the form of a receipt to be registered, but not an acknowledgment in any other shape as distinguished from the instrument of the transaction. The word "declare" in s. 17 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) is to be taken in the same sense as the words "create, assign, etc." used in the same section, viz., as implying a definite change of legal relation to the property by an expression of will embodied in the document referred to. It implies a declaration of will, not a mere statement of a fact, and thus a deed of partition which causes a change of legal relation to the property divided amongst all the parties to it is a declaration in the intended sense; but a letter containing an admission, direct or inferential, that a partition once took place, does not "declare" a right within the meaning of the section. It is not the expression or declaration of will by which the right is constituted. Quere—Whether, if the above document were itself a release operating or intended to operate as a declared volition constituting or severing ownership, it could be received even for the purpose of contradicting a witness who had denied that he had previously made a statement inconsistent with his evidence. *SAKHARAM KRISHNAJI v. 65. — Release.—In June 1876 L executed a bond in favour of S, in which he mortgaged, amongst other property, a village called Chand Khara, as security for the payment of certain moneys. He subsequently sold such village to A, concealing the fact that it had been mortgaged to S. On this fact coming to the knowledge of A, he threatened L with a criminal prosecution, whereupon L proposed to S in writing that the security of a share in a village called Kelsa, which he alleged was his property, should be substituted for the security of Chand Khara. S accepted this proposal by a letter in which he referred to L's proposal in terms. It subsequently appeared that the share in Kelsa did not belong to L, but to another person. S having sued upon his bond, claiming to enforce thereunder a lien upon Chand Khara, A set up as a defence to the suit that S had agreed to substitute Kelsa for Chand Khara in the bond, producing S's letter as evidence of the agreement. Held that such letter operated as

This agreement was not in writing and registered. The mortgagee subsequently sought to enforce the hypothecation against the whole of the mortgaged property. Held that the agreement, being a new contract for a fresh consideration between persons who were not parties to the mortgage, was not, as between the parties to the mortgage, a release which the law required to be in writing and registered. *GURDIAL MAL v. In June 1885 he executed a document which recited that he and K had not been on amicable terms, and that his adoption had consequently been cancelled, and that she had adopted another son (defendant No. 1) to whom she had given all rights of heirship and declared that in consideration of R200 paid by K, he delivered back to her the rights which he had obtained by virtue of his adoption and heirship. This document was not registered under the General Registration Act (III of 1877), but was registered under s. 56 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), which section applied to the district in which the transaction took place. K died in October 1885, and the plaintiff brought this suit, as adopted son, to recover the property of G. The first defendant, who had been adopted by K subsequently to the plaintiff's adoption, contended that he had been validly adopted, and that he was entitled to the property. He relied (inter alia) upon the release executed by plaintiff in June 1885. It was contended that the release in question was not admissible in evidence, not having been registered under the General Registration Act (III of

S having sued upon the document claiming to recover the amount of the decree by the sale of such property, — Held that the document required to be registered, and; not being registered, the suit thereon was not maintainable. Cases decided by the High Court in which the "sulehnamah," having been relied on, not as containing the hypothecation itself, but as evidence only of a separate parol agreement, or in which a decree, having been made in accordance with the terms of the document, was held not to require registration, remarked upon and distinguished by SPANKIE, J. SURJU PRASAD v. In a suit in the nature of a suit for specific performance brought by V to compel J T to execute the deed of sale to V and to register the same as promised in the writing of 28th April 1874, — Held that the writing required registration under Act VIII of 1871, s. 17, cls. 2 and 3, as it distinctly acknowledged the receipt of Rs. 100 as part of the consideration for the sale of the house to the plaintiff for the sum of Rs. 4,800, and operated to create an interest in the house of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards. MAHAD v. mentioned the money as being in part payment of the sum of Rs14,000, the amount for which the plaintiff had agreed to purchase the property. Instead of completing the contract of sale with the plaintiff and putting him in possession, the defendant sold it to other persons. In a suit to set aside the sale to them and to compel the defendant to execute a conveyance to the plaintiff,—Held that the receipt for Rs1,000 earnest-money (exhibit No. 5) fell within cl. (3) of s. 17 of the Registration Act (VIII of 1871), as being an acknowledgment of the receipt or payment of consideration on account of the creation of a right, title, or interest in immovable property of the value of upwards of Rs100, and was therefore inadmissible in evidence, not having been registered; but that under s. 91 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) oral evidence was admissible to prove the payment, notwithstanding the existence of the written receipt. The document was stamped as a receipt with a stamp of one anna. Held that, for the purpose of establishing satisfaction of all claims which the plaintiff and the defendant had upon one another, the document was admissible in evidence; but that, if used as evidence of title, it came within the provisions of s. 17 of the Registration Act (XX of 1866) and the corresponding provisions of the Registration Act (III of 1877), and was inadmissible unless duly registered. FAKI v. 85. ——— and cl. (b)—Receipts by mortgagees.—Receipts passed by a mortgagee for sums paid on account of the mortgage-debt, and exceeding R100 each, are not inadmissible in evidence for want of registration under Act III of 1877, s. 17. The technical term "consideration" implies that the person to whom the money is paid himself limits or extinguishes his interest in the land in consideration of such payment. Such limitation or extinction (if there can be said to be any) as results from the payment on account of the mortgage-debt is the legal consequence of such payment, and not the act of the mortgagee. The payment reduces the sum due at the time on the mortgage, and thus modifies the account between the mortgagor and mortgagee. But it does not operate to limit or confine within narrower limits the right or interest of the mortgagee in the land, which is simply to have the payment of the principal and interest secured on the mortgaged premises by some one or other of the remedies available for that purpose. Money paid on account of a mortgage-debt is not the consideration for the limitation or extinction of so much of the interest in the land created by the mortgage, and a receipt for such a payment need not therefore be registered under s. 17, cl. (b), of the Registration Act III of 1877. Dalip Singh v. Durga Prasad, I. L. R., 1 All., 449, dissented from. SHIDLINGAPA v. CHENBASAPA [I. L. R., 4 Bom., 85

certain lands were mortgaged for R675. The mortgage-bond provided that the mortgagee was to enjoy the rents and profits in lieu of interest on R475, and that the remaining R200 were to carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum. In 1880 a receipt was passed by the mortgagee to the mortgagor reciting that on taking accounts R525 was due on account of the mortgage, that R100 was paid on the day of the receipt, that a further sum of R100 was to be paid in a month and a half, and that the rents and profits of the property were in future to be taken for the interest on the balance of R325 only. In 1896 the mortgagor sued for redemption, and relied on the receipt in support of his case. Held that the receipt did not require registration. It purported to be a mere settlement of accounts, and was not intended to modify or supersede the original mortgage contract. Cl. 4, s. 92, of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) had therefore no application to the case. LAKSHMAN v. DAMODAR [I. L. R., 24 Bom., 609

89. ——— and s. 49—Mortgage-bond—Indorsement of part-payment—Receipt.—The strictest construction should be placed on the prohibitory and penal sections of the Registration Act, which impose serious disqualifications for non-observance of registration. An instrument to come within s. 17 (b) of the Registration Act (III of 1877) must in itself purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit, or extinguish some right, title, or interest of the value of R100 or upwards in immoveable property. To come within s. 17 (c), it must be on the face of it an acknowledgment of the receipt of payment of some consideration on account of the creation, declaration, assignment, limitation, or extinguishment of such a right, title, or interest. In a suit by a mortgagee for the sale of immoveable property mortgaged in certain simple mortgage-bonds for amounts severally exceeding R100, the defendant pleaded that he had made certain payments in respect of the bonds, and in support of his plea relied on indorsements of payment upon them, one of which was as follows: "Paid on the 21st December R200." The other indorsements were in similar terms. Held by the Full Bench (STRAIGHT, J., doubting) that the indorsements, even if assumed to be receipts, did not fall within s. 17 (b) of the Registration Act, inasmuch as a receipt, unless so framed and worded as to purport expressly to limit or extinguish an interest in immoveable property (which the indorsements did not), could not come within the section, and what ordinarily operated to limit or extinguish a mortgagee's interest in the mortgaged property was not the paper receipt, but the actual part-payment of the mortgage-debt. Held also that the indorsements did not fall within s. 17 (c) of the Act, inasmuch as, taken by themselves, they were merely memoranda made by the mortgagee, and could not be treated as acknowledgments, nor, even if assumed to be such, did they show, upon their face, that they were acknowledgments, of the receipt or payment of any consideration for the limitation or extinguishment of any interest

91. — Receipt showing payment of money—Document proving extinction of mortgage right.—Plaintiff purchased a portion of certain land from two persons who owed him money on mortgage bonds and took a mortgage over another portion, taking possession of the whole estate as security for the balance of his debt. He then permitted defendants to purchase a portion and to take a mortgage over the remainder of the lands, and gave them possession, on condition that they should pay to him the said balance that was due. Plaintiff, alleging that defendants had failed to pay him the balance, now filed this suit to recover possession of the land. Defendants contended that the balance had been duly paid, and in support of that contention produced a receipt which, however, was held to be inadmissible in evidence for want of registration. Oral evidence of the alleged payment was also excluded. Held that the receipt had been wrongly excluded. It did not purport to extinguish the mortgage right, and, even if it did so, it was receivable as evidence of the payment, oral evidence as to which was also admissible. *APPAMMA NATURALU v. This agreement was afterwards confirmed by two of the defendants who were minors when it was entered into: the confirmation was by deed, which was duly registered. Subsequently all the defendants executed a document, which provided for the payment of a portion of the salami on the day when possession should be given as provided in the first agreement, and for the payment of the remainder by instalments which were to carry interest. 111. — Zur-i-peshgi lease —“Leases not exceeding one year,” Meaning of.—Leases which were exempted from the operation of s. 17, cl. 2, Act XX of 1866, were leases the term of which was one year certain. Where a sur-i-peshgi lease was granted for one year, but with a stipulation that unless the loan were repaid within that time it should continue in force, —Held that such a lease came within the words of s. 17, cl. 4, Act XX of 1866, “leases of immoveable property for any term exceeding one year” of which registration was compulsory. BHOJANI MAHTO v. 112. — Lease for one year
—Lease exceeding one year—Option of renewal.—A lease for one year, containing an option of renewal for a further period of one year, is not a lease for a term exceeding one year within the meaning of cl. (d), s. 17 of the Registration Act, so as to render registration thereof compulsory. Certain correspondence passed between the plaintiff and the defendant relating to a lease of a flat in premises in occupation of the plaintiff which admittedly contained an agreement for a lease for one year with an option of renewal for another year. The terms in which the option was given were as follows: The defendant in one letter wrote, “So I expect you will give me the option of renewal for another year, respectively five months, on same terms.” To which the plaintiff replied, “You may have the option of retaining it (the flat) for another year on the same terms, but not for a shorter period.” In pursuance of an arrangement, the defendant had a draft lease prepared embodying the terms agreed on, which he sent to the plaintiff for approval, and which was in due course returned by him “approved.” The defendant then had the lease engrossed and properly stamped, but the plaintiff eventually refused to execute it, and it was never signed by the defendant. The option of renewal was given in the unexecuted lease in the following terms: “Also with option to renew for another twelve months certain.” The defendant having entered into possession and disputes having arisen, the plaintiff gave him notice to quit and sued to eject him, alleging that at the most he was a mere monthly tenant. The defendant pleaded that under the lease he was entitled to hold for a year. The year expired before the suit came on to be heard, and the defendant, not having exercised the option to renew, vacated the premises. At the hearing the defendant, in support of his case, tendered the correspondence and the stamped unexecuted lease. It was objected that the correspondence was inadmissible in evidence, because the option to renew made the period for which the lease was to run exceed one year, and therefore rendered registration compulsory. On behalf of the defendant it was urged that registration was unnecessary, as the option did not make the lease one for a longer period than one year, and that the stamped unexecuted lease must be treated as part of the correspondence. Held, following Hand v. Hall, L. R., 2 Ex. D., 355, that the existence of the option did not create a lease for a term exceeding one year within the meaning of cl. (d), s. 17 of the Registration Act, and that consequently the correspondence did not require registration. BHOJANI MAHTO v. SHIBNATH PARA, I. L. R., 13 Calc., 113, dissented from. BOYD v. He was to vacate when asked to do so by the plaintiff. Held that the lease created a tenancy-at-will, and did not require registration, although an annual rent was reserved thereby. JY-BAJ GOPAL v. 114. — Lease for one year at a rental of more than ₹100—Evidence—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 4 and 107.—The owner of certain land exchanged it for certain other land, but took a lease for one year of the former land and paid the rent thereof, and received and retained the rents of the land he had acquired by the exchange. Held, in a suit for recovery of possession on the expiry of the lease, that the fact that such a lease recites the fact of the exchange of the lands does not evidence the exchange, and as such create a title in land. Nor does the fact that the rent reserved under the lease is more than ₹200 create an interest in land of ₹100 and more in value, so as to necessitate registration of the lease under s. 17 of the Registration Act. —Held that a bhadekhat is an agreement between a lessee and a lessor in the nature of a counterpart of a lease, and that an instrument of this character must, for the purposes of the Registration Act, be treated as a lease. Held also that a provision in the bhadekhat, that the lessee might after six months remain in occupation at a monthly rent, till the lessor called upon him to vacate, did not extend the term for which the lease was granted, as to the conclusion of that term the lessee would be only monthly tenant of the lessor, and therefore it did not require registration under s. 17 of Act XX of 1866. MORO VITHAL v. —Lease from year to year.—In a suit for possession of a piece of land, and for rent of the same, the plaintiff produced in support of his claim two sarkhats or kabuliats purporting to be executed in his favour by the defendants, and dated respectively in January 1875 and June 1876. These documents were not registered. The first, after reciting that the executant had taken the land from the plaintiff on a specified yearly rent and promised to pay the same yearly, proceeded as follows: "If the owner of the land wishes to have it vacated, he shall give me fifteen days' notice, and I will vacate without making objection: if I delay in vacating the land, the owner can realize, by recourse to law, rent from me at the rate of Rs 8 per annum." The second sarkhat, after reciting that the executants had taken the land from the plaintiff on a yearly rent specified for six years and promised to pay the same year by year, proceeded thus: "And if the said Shaikh wishes to have the land vacated within the said term, he shall first give us fifteen days' notice, and we will vacate it without objection." The lower Courts held that the sarkhats were not admissible in evidence, as they required registration under s. 17 (4) of the Registration Act VIII of 1871, being leases of immovable property from year to year or reserving a yearly rent. Held that the two sarkhats created no rights except those of tenants-at-will, inasmuch as the clause common to both to the effect that at any time, at the will of the lessor, the lessees were to give up the land at fifteen days' notice, governed all the previous clauses, and the defendants could be asked to quit at any time before the lapse of the term at fifteen days' notice. Held therefore that the leases did not fall under s. 17 (4) of Act VIII of 1871; that their registration was not compulsory; and that they could not be excluded from evidence under s. 49 of Act III of 1877, which governed the question of admissibility, while Act VIII of 1871 governed the question whether registration was or was not compulsory. KHODA BAKSH v. 138. ————— and cl. (b) — Document creating a right to obtain another document—Pleading admission—Effect of admission in pleading of execution of contract—Evidence to prove an admitted document not necessary—Evidence.—By an agreement, dated 2nd August 1880, the defendant agreed to sell to the plaintiff a certain piece of land with a dwelling-house for ₹1,900. At the time of the execution of this agreement the plaintiff paid the defendant ₹100 earnest-money, and the agreement provided that the remaining ₹1,800 should be paid within a month from the date of the agreement when the deed of conveyance of the property should be executed. The material part of the agreement was as follows: "I have received from you ₹100, namely, rupees one hundred, as earnest (i.e.) at time of the execution of this bargain-paper. And as to the remaining ₹1,800, namely, one thousand and eight hundred, the same are duly to be paid to me within one month from this day, when you will get the deed (or) document made in your favour. And all the expenditure in respect of the deed (or) documents and transferring (the property) to your name you are duly to make on your account . . . On these terms this informal bargain-paper, having been written, is agreed to and delivered." The plaintiff sued for specific performance, and tendered the agreement in evidence, although unregistered. Held that the document, although unregistered, was admissible in evidence under cl. (A) of s. 17 of the Registration Act III of 1877. Being unregistered, it could not create or assign the interest intended by the parties to be transferred, and being thus incapable of carrying out the primary intention of the parties, the agreement became one "merely creating a right to obtain another document which would, when executed," effect the desired purpose if the execution were accompanied with registration. 157. ————— Certificate of sale—Property sold in lots—Single sale-certificate for lots each under Rs. 100.—In compliance with an application for the sale of land to satisfy a decree, the Civil Court put up certain land to auction in four lots. One lot was purchased by the plaintiff for Rs. 88, and each of the other three were bought by him for less than Rs. 100, the price for the whole amounting to Rs. 111-8-0, for which amount the Court granted a single certificate of sale dated 10th February 1874. This certificate was never registered. The plaintiff applied to be put in possession, but, the defendant resisting him, his application was rejected. On the 16th of November 1879, the plaintiff brought this suit to have his right declared to the piece bought for Rs. 88, and to recover its possession. Along with the plaint the plaintiff produced the unregistered certificate of sale of the 10th February 1874. On the application of the plaintiff, another certificate for the same property was issued by the Court to the plaintiff on the 31st of October 1877, that is, three years after the confirmation of sale. This was registered on the 20th of December 1877, and was produced by the plaintiff in the proceedings which gave rise to the present suit. It was obtained by the plaintiff on the 23rd of February 1880, and tendered in evidence, but was rejected under s. 63 of the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882). Held that, although the four lots purchased by the plaintiff at the auction-sale were included in one certificate of sale, such certificate, although one instrument in form, should, for the purpose of registration, be regarded as four separate certificates of the four several lots, each of which did not require registration. *DEVIDAS JAGJIVAN v. 3. ———— Lease for one year—Lease exceeding one year.—A kabuliati dated the 6th May 1880, and executed by the lessee of a house in favour of the lessors, set forth that the house was let to the former at an annual rent of R3 for a term of one year. It also contained this stipulation: "I (the lessee) do declare that I shall continue to pay the annual rent every year, and that, if I should fail to pay the rent in any year, the owners of the house shall be at liberty to recover the rent through the Court." The lease was not registered. In a suit by the lessors against the lessee for possession of the house and for R7-8 arrears of rent, the defendant pleaded that, according to the right construction of the lease, he was entitled to occupy the house and the lessors were not entitled to eject him therefrom, so long as he paid the annual rent of R3; that he had duly paid rent at the agreed rate from the 6th May 1880 to the 6th May 1884; and that, under these circumstances, the plaintiffs were not entitled to either of the reliefs claimed. Held that the lease was for one year only, and thus falling under s. 18 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), it was admissible in evidence without registration; that the defendant had been a mere tenant-at-will since the expiry of the year 1880-81; and that the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to possession of the house. *Hand v. s. 20—Refusal of executing party to initial alteration—Registrable document.—Refusal by the executing party to initial an apparent alteration not materially affecting the instrument, unaccompanied by any suggestion that the alteration was improperly made after execution, does not render the document non-registrable. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF VENKATASAMI NAIK. 4 Mad., 101

1. ——— s. 21 (1871, s. 21; 1886, s. 21) —Requisites for registration—Description of property.—The only two things which are absolutely required by s. 21 of Act XX of 1886, as conditions without compliance with which registration is prohibited are, first, that the instrument shall contain a description of the property sufficient to identify it; and, secondly, that if the instrument contains a map, a copy or copies of the map shall accompany the instrument when presented for registration. The other provisions of s. 21 are directory only. The circumstance therefore that the description of the parcels in the instrument does not specify the registration district, or sub-district, or division, or village, in which the property is situate, or the former occupancy, is not alone sufficient to disentitle a party getting an instrument registered, if the description in the instrument is sufficient to identify the property. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF NARAINASAMI PILLAI. 4 Mad., 91

2. ——— Presentation of two instruments—Description of property only in one.—Where two instruments are contained in the same paper and relate to the same property, and are both presented for, and in all other respects are entitled to registration, it is not a sufficient ground for refusing registration that in one of the documents the property is described only by reference to the other. Though in the later of two instruments there are no words directly referring to the first, yet the frame of the document showing that the second document should be taken to refer to the first, the second document must be taken to contain a sufficient reference to the first. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF VENKATASAMI NAIK. 4 Mad., 101

a Sub-Registrar.—Certain property was described in a mortgage-bond as bearing towji No. 10, as paying a sudder jama of R719, and as lying within the jurisdiction of thana Kotwali, sub-district Bhagulpur, collectorate of Bhagulpur. This description was so far erroneous in that the property was in reality situated in thana Amarpur, sub-district Banka, and bore a sudder jama of R919-15. Banka was, however, within the area of the district of Bhagulpur. The mortgage-bond was registered by the Sub-Registrar of Bhagulpur, who was, under s. 7 of the Registration Act, authorized, in addition to his own duties, to exercise and perform the duties and powers of the Registrar of Bhagulpur. Held by PIGOT, O'KINEALY, MACPHERSON, and GHOSH, J.J. (PETHERAM, C.J., dissenting), that the provisions of s. 21 of the Act had not been complied with, that the description of the property was misleading and insufficient for the purposes of identification, and that therefore no registration of the document had been effected within the provisions of the Registration Act. Held by PETHERAM, C.J., that the description was sufficient to identify the property, and that, the Sub-Registrar having been authorized to exercise the powers and duties of the Registrar of Bhagulpur and the property being situate in sub-district Banka, the Sub-Registrar of which sub-district was subordinate to the Registrar of the district of Bhagulpur, the provisions of s. 28 of the Act being directory only, registration of the document was valid. BAIJ NATH TEWARI v. SHRO SAROY BHAGUT

[I. L. R., 18 Cal., 556]

4. ——— and s. 60—Description of property not contained in the body of the deed of conveyance, but inserted as a foot-note.—A conveyance of immoveable property did not contain in the body of the deed a description of it sufficient to identify it. In a foot-note, however, such a description was given, and it was signed by the assignee only. The deed was accepted by the Registrar, and was registered, and a certificate to that effect was given under s. 60 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). The deed, being tendered in evidence, was objected to on the ground that it ought to be treated as unregistered, since it had been improperly accepted for registration. Held that the error in accepting it, if error there was, did not invalidate the registration: see Sah Mukhan Lal Panday v. Sah Koondan Lal, 15 B. L. R., 228; L. R., 2 I. A., 210. ADAM ISUFBEHAI v. JAMNADAS RANCHORDAS. I. L. R., 17 Bom., 94

5. ——— Defective description of property—Deed affecting land registered in wrong book—Suit by purchaser for value.—In a suit for land, forming part of the self-acquired property of a deceased Hindu, it appeared that in 1885 his widow and his cousin had (on the death without issue of his son) entered into an agreement whereby the latter relinquished in the widow's favour for consideration all his rights in the self-acquired property left by her husband. The agreement was registered in book No. 4 under the Registration Act, 1877, and it contained no such description of the property as to satisfy the requirements of s. 21. The plaintiff afterwards purchased the land now in question from the cousin; the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 having purchased it and obtained possession from the widow. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. NARASIMMA v. SUBBARAYUDU

[I. L. R., 18 Mad., 364]

s. 22—Sufficiency of description—Question as to nature or effect of document—Intention of parties.—When any question arises under the Registration Act as to the nature or effect of any instrument, or the sufficiency of any description contained in it, the Court must endeavour to gather from the words used the intention of the parties, and give effect to it, and not require as a condition of registration that the instrument be drawn up in technical language. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF VENKATASAMI NAIK 4 Mad., 101

1. — s. 23 (1871, s. 23; 1866, ss. 22, 24; 1864, s. 18)—Time for presentation for registration—Power of Registrar to register deed after time specified in Act.—There was no provision in Act XVI of 1864 obliging or empowering a registrar to register a deed after the expiry of the time specified in s. 18, whether under a decree of Court or otherwise, except in cases which came under the provisions of s. 15. MONMOHINDER DOSSEE v. BISHEN MOYEE DOSSEE. BISHEN MOYEE DOSSEE v. DELSHAD BIRRE [7 W. R., 112]

2. — Time for presentation for registration—Procedure.—Ss. 22 and 24 of Act XX of 1866 made it imperative that the instruments therein referred to should be presented for registration within four, or at most eight months from the date of their execution; but the Act fixed no time within which the registration must be completed. Where the registration of an instrument has been declared by a competent Court to be invalid, the instrument, if originally presented in due time, may again be submitted for registration, although the four months provided by s. 22, Act XX of 1866, and the further period of four months allowed by s. 24, have both expired. MUKHUN LALL PANDAY v. 3. — and ss. 34, 35, and 73—Time for presentation for registration—Refusal to register—Effect of non-appearance within prescribed time.—When a document has been presented for registration in due time by one of the executants, but the others have failed to appear within the time prescribed, the registering officer must "refuse to register," as in cases falling under the latter clauses of s. 35, Act VIII of 1871, and must record the reasons for his refusal. The party desiring registration ought to apply to the Registrar before the period for registration has gone by, either to register or to refuse to register, so as to enable him, in case of refusal, to take further proceedings under s. 73. So soon as it appears that the prescribed time has gone by and the executing parties have not appeared, the order of refusal should be made at once. IN THE MATTER OF THE REGISTRATION ACT, 1871. IN THE MATTER OF HUTOBBHARY BANERJEE 11 B. L. R., 20

4. — Period within which document may be registered—Agreement of parties.—By an agreement entered into between the parties, the vendor bound himself to execute within thirty days a deed of conveyance, and in default, that the agreement should be considered as itself the deed of conveyance of certain lands mentioned in the agreement. The vendor having failed to execute such deed, the vendee, more than four months after the date of the agreement, presented it for registration. Held that the conduct of the parties concerned could in no way affect the period of limitation within which such agreement could have been registered under the Act, and that the agreement could not be registered. NOBAN NUSYA v. DHON MAHOMED

5. — Certificate of sale—Period within which it should be registered.—Although s. 316 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1877, says that a certificate granted thereunder shall bear "the date of the confirmation of the sale," that provision cannot alter the fact of execution or the time execution does take place, which is the starting-point from which the four months mentioned in s. 23 of the Registration Act, 1877, begin to run. Held therefore that a certificate granted under that section in respect of a sale which was confirmed on the 7th April 1880, which was registered within four months from the 10th May 1882, when it was executed, was registered within the time allowed by law. The certificate showing that a document has been registered is conclusive proof that it has been registered according to law. HUSAINI BEGAM v. MULO

6. — Presentation for registration—Limitation for completion of registration.—There is no provision, either in the Registration Act or in the Stamp Act, which lays down that, where a document is presented for registration insufficiently stamped, such a presentation shall have no effect. The only effect of such a presentation is that the actual registration is delayed. There is in law no limitation for the actual fact of registration, provided that the requirements of the Act have been complied with in the matters for which a limitation of time is provided. Mukhun Lall Panday v. Koondun Lall, 15 B. L. R., 228, followed. SHAMA CHARAN DAS v. JOYENGOOLAH I. L. R., 11 Cal., 750

1. — s. 28 (1871, s. 28) and s. 85—"Whole or some portion of the property."—The terms of s. 28 of Act VIII of 1871 must not be construed in their literal sense, inasmuch as to do so would defeat the intention of the Legislature that registration should be made with reference to the locality of the property to which the document relates; and hence the words of the section "some portion of the property" must be read as meaning some substantial portion. A bond which purported to mortgage 500 square yards of land situate at P, two entire villages and shares in fourteen villages in the G district, and a village in the C district, and which required registration under Act VIII of 1871, was registered at P. Held that the bond was not properly registered in accordance with the provisions of s. 28 of Act VIII of 1871. Per MAHMOOD, J.—The imperative direction of s. 28 of Act VIII of 1871 is addressed not to the registering officer, but to the person presenting a document to that officer, for registration; and therefore s. 85, which refers only to defects in the appointment or procedure of the registering officer, could not cure the irregularity which was committed under s. 28. SHEO DAYAL MAL v. HARI RAM. I. L. R., 7 All., 590

2. ———— Transfer of decree—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 232, 244—Appeal—Act III of 1877, s. 28.—The words of s. 28 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), “some portion of the property,” should not be read as meaning some substantial portion. Sheo Dayal Mal v. Hari Ram, I. L. R., 7 All., 590, dissented from. The holders of a decree for the sale of mortgaged property transferred the same to M by instruments which were registered at a place where a small portion only of the property was situate. Subsequently M transferred the decree to other persons, and the co-transferees applied, under s. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code, to have their names substituted for those of the original decree-holders. The judgment-debtor opposed the application on the grounds that M’s name had not been substituted for the names of the original decree-holders, who had transferred to him, and that the transfer by M were inoperative, as the instruments of transfer had not been registered at the place where the substantial portion of the mortgaged property was situate in accordance with s. 28 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). The application was allowed by the Courts below. Held that the objection in reference to s. 28 of the Registration Act could only properly be raised between the transferor and the transferee, and not by the judgment-debtor, and moreover had no force. GULZARI LAL v. DAYA RAM [I. L. R., 9 All., 46]

3. ———— and ss. 64, 65, and 66—Place of registration of documents.—The requirements of s. 28 of Act VIII of 1871 are fulfilled by the registration of a document relating to immoveable property in the office of the sub-registrar within whose sub-district any portion of the property is situate. The words “some portion of the property” are not to be read as meaning some substantial portion of the property. All matters of publicity which it is the object of a register to afford are provided for in this respect, by the carrying out of the provisions of ss. 64, 65, and 66. HARI RAM v. SHEO DAYAL MAL [I. register—Special cause—Registration Act VIII of 1871, ss. 31 and 85.—The words “any person intending to register any document” in s. 31 of the Registration Act VIII of 1871 include, not only the person or persons in whose favour a document is executed, but also any person or persons executing the same. Under the provisions of that section, therefore, the presentation of a document for registration, on special cause shown, at the residence of a party executing it, is valid. The registering officer is the judge of the sufficiency of the special cause; and, if he is satisfied, the Civil Court has no power to question his decision on that point. Assuming the presentation at the residence of one of the executants of a document for registration to be an irregularity, it is one which, if committed in good faith, is covered by the provision of s. 85 of Act VIII of 1871. *ISAK MAHAMAD v. 2. ———— and s. 77—Attendance before Registrar to admit execution, Time for.—Although s. 34 of the Registration Act, 1877, lays down that no document shall be registered unless the persons executing the same, their representatives, assigns, or authorised agents appear before the Sub-Registrar within the periods allowed for presentation, yet this section is directly subject to s. 77, and that section nowhere provides any time within which the parties, their representatives, assigns, or authorized agents, shall appear to admit execution. *SHAMA CHARAN DASS v. There is nothing in ss. 76 and 77 to compel the Registrar in cases where there has been no express denial of execution, but where the executant refuses to attend at his office, to make his order of refusal within the time limited for admission of execution by ss. 23 and 24. The zamindar appeared at the registration office and admitted the execution of the pottah, but did not assent to its being registered, whereupon the registering officer withheld registration. The vendor appeared personally, and admitted execution, but refused to endorse the deed, on the ground that she did not intend to sell, but only to renew a certain deed of mortgage. The third person did not appear before the registering officer and did not admit or deny the execution of the deed on her part, but the other two persons stated that it had been executed without her knowledge or authority. It was held that, under the provisions of ss. 24 and 25 of Act VIII of 1871, the registering officer was not warranted in registering the deed. The deed of sale, which the suit was brought to enforce, not having been registered according to law, could not be received in evidence of the sale, and the suit to enforce the sale was unmaintainable. BAIJANATH v. MAHOMED IRADAT . . . 7 N. W., 185

6. — Refusal to register—Disability of executants from minority, idiocy, or lunacy.—The words of s. 35 of the Registration Act, VIII of 1871, which provide that "If all or any of the persons by whom the document [i.e., the document presented for registration] purports to be executed deny its execution, or if any such person appears to be a minor, an idiot, or a lunatic, or if any person by whom the document purports to be executed is dead, and his representative or assign denies its execution, the registering officer shall refuse to register the document," taken literally, seem to require the registering officer to refuse registration of a deed which purports to be executed by several persons if any one of them deny execution, or appear to be a minor, an idiot, or a lunatic. Since such a construction would cause great difficulty and injustice, and would be inconsistent with the language and tenor of the rest of the Act, the words in question must be read distributively, and construed to mean that the registering officer shall refuse to register the document against the persons who deny the execution of the deed and against such persons as appear to be under any of the disabilities mentioned. The registration of a deed is not necessarily invalid by reason of a failure on the part of the registering officer to comply with the provisions of the Registration Act. Mukhen Lall Panday v. Registration was effected in the ordinary way; the parties appearing before the Registrar and the minor admitting execution of the bond, which was then registered. Held, in a suit on the bond, that there being nothing to show that the minor appeared to be such to the Registrar at the time of registration so as to enable the Registrar to refuse registration under s. 35 of the Registration Act, and the concealment of the fact of the executant's minority both by himself and by the plaintiff from the Registrar not amounting to fraud (see s. 17 of the Contract Act), so as to invalidate the registration-proceedings as against the minor, the Registrar had in no way violated the law relating to the registration of documents, and the bond must be taken to have been duly registered. SHAM CHARAN MAL v. 9. — Representative of deceased settlor—Admission of execution of document by one out of three representatives—Defect of procedure in course of registration—Validity of registration.—The mother of three sons executed a deed of gift in favour of one of them and then died. The donee alone registered the document, the other sons not appearing before the registering officer. The document having been subsequently put in evidence, it was contended that it was inadmissible on the ground that under s. 35 of the Registration Act, the donor being dead, the execution of the document must be admitted by the representative of the deceased, and that an admission by one out of three representatives is not an admission within the meaning of the Act. Held, that, assuming that the three sons of the deceased donor ought to have joined in admitting the execution of the document and that the registering officer was in error in considering one of them the due representative of the deceased, such error was a defect in procedure in the course of registration and the registration was not rendered invalid by reason thereof. PAKRAJ v. 10. — and ss. 74 and 77—Denial of execution, What is—Non-appearance—Specific Relief Act I of 1877, s. 45.—A, by an indenture of mortgage, dated 15th March 1887, mortgaged certain property to S to secure the repayment of Rs18,500 within two months. The deed was duly lodged for registration; but A (the mortgagor) neglected to appear at the registration office to admit execution. A summons was accordingly issued against him under s. 36 of the Registration Act III of 1877 to enforce his attendance, and was duly served upon him as required by s. 39. He, however, did not obey the summons, and neglected to attend the Sub-Registrar's office on the day appointed. He subsequently went away to Arabia without admitting execution, and was not expected to return to Bombay. S (the mortgagee) then applied to the Sub-Registrar to treat A's neglect to attend and admit execution as equivalent to a denial of execution and to "refuse to register" the deed under the provisions of s. 35 (last clause), in order that an application might be made to the Registrar, under s. 73, for the purpose of establishing the right of S (the mortgagee) to have the deed registered. The Sub-Registrar, however, considered that he could not treat A's non-appearance as a denial of execution. On application to the High Court under s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act I of 1877.—Held, following Radhakishan Roures Dakra v. Choomilal, I. L. R.,

11. — Refusal to register—Disability of minority.—The object of s. 35 of the Registration Act, 1877, which directs the registering officer to refuse to register a document if the person by whom it purports to be executed appears to be a minor, is that, if the registration authorities refuse to register on that ground, the question of minority may at once be brought into a Civil Court, and there determined. *CHUNEE MUL JOHURY v. 13. — Mortgage executed and registered by major son and by the father for himself and for a minor son.—A joint Hindu family consisted of the father and two sons, the one of full age, the other a minor. The father and the major son executed a mortgage of the joint family property, the father describing himself in the bond as acting for himself and as guardian and next friend of the minor son. The bond was registered on the admission of the father and the major son. Held, in a suit by the mortgagees for sale, that there being no dispute as to the fact of the debt for which the mortgage was executed, and it not being alleged that such debt was incurred for any purpose which would exempt the son from the pious obligation of paying it, that there was no defect in the registration of the bond in suit which would prevent its affecting the share of the minor son. *Shankar Das v. s. 47—Priority—Possession—Notice.

—The plaintiff purchased certain land by a deed dated the 8th April 1879. The deed was registered on the 26th August of the same year. The defendant purchased the same land by a deed dated the 14th June 1879. It was registered on the same day. That deed recited that the land was in the possession of the plaintiff as tenant. Both the deeds were optionally registrable. The Subordinate Judge rejected the plaintiff's claim, and awarded the land to the defendant. His decree was affirmed, on appeal, by the District Judge on the ground that the defendant's deed was registered before the plaintiff's deed. On appeal to the High Court, —Held that the plaintiff was entitled to the land. Both the deeds having been registered according to law, they operated from their respective dates of execution as provided by s. 47 of the Registration Act III of 1877. Held also that the defendant had notice of the plaintiff's equitable title to the land. SANTAYA MANGARSAYA v. NARAYAN . . . I. L. R., 8 Bom., 162

—Verbal contract between Hindus—Subsequent registered deed.—Where a lien by verbal contract and deposit of title-deeds of immoveable property in the Island of Bombay by a Hindu in favour of a Hindu was created before the 1st of January 1865, when the first general Registration Act (XVI of 1864) came into force, and a Gujarati document (un-registered) was subsequently (on the 13th of June 1865) executed by the giver of the lien which set out its particulars, and acknowledged the receipt of the loan on account of which the lien was given, it was held that the original oral contract of lien, being in itself a perfected transaction, was not merged in or invalidated by the subsequent document, and that therefore the fact of the latter not being registered did not affect the validity of the prior transaction. S. 48 of Act XX of 1866, which enacted that all instruments duly registered under that Act and relating to moveable or immoveable property should take effect against any oral agreement relating to the same property, did not apply to oral agreements completed before Act XVI of 1864 came into force. *JIVANDAS KESHAVJI v. REGISTRATION ACT (III OF 1877)

2. ———— Registration of illegal or fraudulent document—Priority—Oral agreement accompanied by possession—English principles of equity.—Persons claiming under a registered document which has been given, accepted, and registered in fraud of a third party, and in collusion with the grantor, are not entitled to the benefit of s. 48 of the Registration Act (VIII of 1871), and therefore the registration of a document of title which has been procured in fraud of a party possessing a prior equitable title, or with actual notice of his prior equitable title, does not deprive such party of his priority. Registration cannot confer validity upon an instrument which is ultra vires, or illegal, or fraudulent. The reason for the exception made by s. 48 of the Registration Act (VIII of 1871) in favour of an oral agreement accompanied by possession is that by such possession the parties who rely on a subsequent registered deed had, or might, if they had been reasonably vigilant, have had, previously to their entering into their contract with the vendor and to their taking a conveyance, notice, by the fact of such possession, that there was some prior claim to the property. Therefore, where there is actual notice of a prior oral agreement, although unaccompanied by possession, the object of the Legislature is fully attained. *Hicks v. Subsequently on the 3rd January 1896 S executed a registered bainanamah in respect of the same property in favour of R and H, which was followed by a registered deed of conveyance in their favour, dated the 9th January 1896, and delivery of possession, although R and H had notice of the previous contract with J before the registration of the bainanamah and execution of the deed of conveyance in their favour. Held that, having regard to s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act and s. 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act, in a suit for the specific performance of contract brought by J, neither the bainanamah nor the deed of conveyance in favour of R and H could prevail against the prior unregistered contract of J. Held further that the unregistered document of the 27th December 1895 came under s. 17, cl. 15. — Suit for money-decree on mortgage-deed of immoveable property—Admissibility of document in evidence.—A sued in the Small Cause Court on the covenant of a mortgage-deed for a money-decree. The deed, being unregistered, was held inadmissible in evidence. Held, on reference to the High Court, that the unregistered mortgage-deed, being in its terms indivisible and disclosing one transaction only which it would be imperative on the plaintiff to prove for the purpose of making out his case, was, under s. 49 of Act VIII of 1871, inadmissible in evidence to prove a fact for which registration was unnecessary. *MATTONGEXEY DOSSEE v. [I. L. R., 4 Calc., 83; 2 C. L. R., 428]

16. — Admissibility of document requiring registration—Divisible transaction.—When a transaction is indivisible, and the registration of the document evidencing it is by law compulsory, the document will not be admissible in evidence if not duly registered; but when the transaction is divisible,—as when upon a loan of money it is agreed (i) that the loan shall be secured by a bond containing a covenant for repayment of the sum advanced with interest within a certain time, and also (ii) that certain designated property shall be hypothecated as collateral security for the repayment of the loan,—the same rule does not apply, and an unregistered bond for the amount advanced, with interest, containing a further provision that as collateral security for the amount advanced certain property should remain hypothecated, may be used as evidence of the loan, although inadmissible to prove the hypothecation. KRISHTO LALL GHOSH v. BONO-MALEE ROY

17. — Admissibility of unregistered bond in evidence to prove money-debt—Collateral security.—In order to secure a loan of Rs120, the defendant executed a bond to repay the loan with interest, which provided that by way of collateral security certain immoveable property should be hypothecated. The bond was not registered. In a suit upon the bond praying for a money-decree against the defendant and for a declaration of a lien upon the property hypothecated, it was objected that the bond was inadmissible in evidence by reason of its not being registered. Held that the bond might be taken as divisible in its nature, as being a money-bond with a provision that certain property should be hypothecated as collateral security, and that it was therefore admissible in evidence. *GOUB CHURN SURMA v. 19. — Admissibility in evidence of unregistered deed in suit to recover debt.—When an instrument purports to create an interest in immoveable property only as a collateral security for the payment of money, and is also a simple contract or bond for the payment of a debt, and where effect is sought to be given to the instrument only as a simple contract, it is admissible in evidence in a suit to recover the debt, though it has not been registered. So far as it is a contract for the payment of money, it is an instrument the registration of which is made optional by s. 18 of Act XX of 1866. VELLAYA PADAYACHY v. MOORTHY PADAYACHY

4 Mad., 174

20. — Instrument creating interest in immoveable property—Suit for money-debt.—The plaintiff sued, as the assignee of a mortgagee of immoveable property, to recover the amount of the debt from the mortgagor in pursuance of an express contract to pay the debt contained in the mortgage. The mortgage was executed before the Registration Act (XVI of 1864) came into operation. The assignment to the plaintiff was executed after the Registration Act (XX of 1866) became law. Held per BITTLESTON, INNES, and COLLETT, J.J., that the assignment, being an instrument operating to create an interest in immoveable property, and as such requiring to be registered under s. 17 of Act XX of 1866, was not admissible in evidence in a suit to enforce the personal obligation only. Per SCORLAND, C.J.—That an instrument which has the two-fold operation of a simple contract or bond to pay a debt and a collateral mortgage security for the debt is admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving the simple contract debt. *ACHOO BAYAHAM v. It is only excluded where it is offered as evidence of a transaction affecting immoveable property. SESHATHRI AYYENGAR v. SANKARA AYYEN

22. — Admissibility in evidence of document inadmissible under Act XX of 1866 as not being registered—Suit for money-debt on document.—A suit was brought to recover money secured by a mortgage in writing of immoveable property made in 1870 whilst the Registration Act XX of 1866 was in force. By Act XX of 1866 the document was not admissible in evidence even to enforce the demand for money, the document not having been registered. By Act VIII of 1871 (the Registration Act) the document was rendered admissible when the suit was brought. Held that

24. ——— and s. 17—Unregistered conveyance—Covenant to pay money contingent on ejection—Suit for money dismissed.—By an unregistered document A stipulated that B should enjoy certain land for a term of years in order that a debt and interest might be liquidated by receipt of profits, estimated at a fixed sum, and it was provided that, if B's possession was disturbed in the meantime, A should pay the balance of the principal then due and interest from the date of the loan. B, having been ejected, sued A upon the covenant to pay. Held that, as the covenant to pay depended on the principal contract, which could not be proved for want of registration, B could not recover. VENKATAYUDU v. 25. ——— Admissibility in evidence of unregistered bond—Suit for money due on bond.—Held by CORON, C.J., following the decisions of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts, but doubting, that an unregistered bond, whereby immoveable property was pledged by way of collateral security, is admissible in evidence where effect is sought to be given to it for the purpose of obtaining a decree for the money due under it. TUKARAM VITHOJI v. 26. ——— Admissibility in evidence of unregistered bond—Suit for money due on bond.—Where a bond or other instrument creating an interest in land also contains a distinct promise to pay the money due under it, such bond or instrument is evidence in a suit brought to recover the money only. SANGAPPA BIN NINGAPPA v. 27. ——— Admissibility in evidence of unregistered bond—Suit for money due on bond.—An unregistered bond containing the condition that the lender will get possession of certain land in default of payment by the borrower within a specified time is admissible in evidence in case the lender sues, not to enforce any charge or lien against the land, but seeks for personal relief in the shape of a decree against the defendant for the payment of the bond-debt. ESHREE RAI v. 29. ——— Suit for money on unregistered mortgage-bond—Promise to pay.—Where the debtor by an unregistered bond acknowledged the debt and promised to pay and subsequently on his failure to pay on a certain date stipulated for its recovery by sale of the hypothecated property,—Held that a suit could be maintained on the personal promise to pay. NENDHARI ROY v. BISSESSARI KUMARI [2 C. W. N., 591]

30. ——— Conveyance containing acknowledgment of debt.—G owed B Rs. 3,500, and executed a conveyance of certain land to B, for which such debt was partly the consideration. In such conveyance G acknowledged his liability for the debt, but he died before it was registered and it did not operate. BEHARI LAL I. L. R., 3 All., 523

31. ——— Unregistered bond hypothecating immoveable property as collateral security—Admissibility of bond as evidence of the money-obligation—Effect of non-registration.—A bond whereby a person obliges himself to pay money to another, and at the same time hypothecates immoveable property as collateral security for such payment, although the money-obligation is of the value of one hundred rupees, and the bond is not registered, can be received in evidence in support of a claim to enforce the money-obligation. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF SHEO DIAL v. 32. ——— Unregistered bond for the payment of money hypothecating immoveable property—Admissibility in evidence of the bond in support of a claim for money—Mortgage.—On the 3rd February 1871 the defendants, having borrowed Rs. 1,000 from the plaintiffs, executed in favour of the latter an instrument in which they mortgaged, by way of conditional sale, certain immoveable property as security for the loan, and in which it was provided that they should pay certain interest on such sum annually, and should pay such sum on the expiration of five years from the date of such instrument, and in the event of failure in these respects that the plaintiffs might apply for foreclosure. On the 18th January 1879 the plaintiffs sued the defendants for the balance of such sum and interest, waiving their claim on such property and suing for such balance as a simple debt, as such instrument was not registered. Held, following Sheo Dial v. Prag Dat Mishr, I. L. R., 3 All., 229, that inasmuch as such instrument involved a personal obligation of the defendants distinct and severable from the obligation in respect of such property, such instrument, notwithstanding it was not registered, was admissible as evidence in support of the claim to enforce that money-obligation; and it was also admissible in proof of the fact that the debt was not exigible from the defendants until on and

33. — Admissibility of unregistered deed—Specific performance, Suit for.—A brought a suit in the Munsif's Court against B and C, alleging that they had sold outright to him by maf-kobala certain landed property for Rs 60, which was duly paid, and the kobala was executed; that possession was given to him; that B and C set up before the Deputy Registrar fraudulent objections to the effect that a stipulation to return the property to the vendors on the repayment by them of the consideration-money had not been embodied in the deed, and that part of the consideration-money was still unpaid; that therefore the Registrar refused to execute the deed; that in fact there was no such stipulation as set up by B and C, and that the whole of the purchase-money was paid; and it was stated in the conclusion of the plaint that the suit had been instituted to set aside the fraudulent objections, and to establish the full title of A as purchaser. Held (MITTAR, J., dissenting) that the suit would not lie. The unregistered deed could not be admitted in evidence, nor parol evidence of the contract be given under which A alleged that he acquired his title. A ought to have proceeded under s. 83 of Act XX of 1866. RAHMATULLA v. SARIUTULLA KAGORI

hypothecated as security for the payment of such damages. S having failed to deliver a portion of such land, M sued him for damages in respect of such portion according to the terms of the lease, not seeking to enforce the hypothecation, as the lease was not registered, but seeking only a money-decree. Held that the lease, being unregistered, could not be received as evidence even of S's personal liability thereunder. Sheo Dial v. 37. — Admissibility in evidence—Suit for damages for breach of covenants in unregistered deed—Document containing covenants for title—Act III of 1877, s. 17—Estoppel.—S L, by a deed of gift of 16th February 1847, granted and assured to S, his daughter, certain immoveable property. By a subsequent unregistered deed of gift of 15th July 1865, S L purported, in consideration of natural love and affection, to grant and convey the same property, the value of which exceeded Rs 100, to B R, the husband of S, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns. The last-mentioned deed contained covenants, on the part of S L, his heirs, executors, and administrators, with B R, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for title to "the hereditaments and premises hereinbefore expressed to be hereby granted and assured unto and to the use of the said B R, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns." S died in the lifetime of B R, who in 1867 mortgaged the premises comprised in the deed of 15th July 1865, and died in 1868. In 1870 the mortgagee sold the premises by auction, under the power of sale contained in the mortgage-deed; the plaintiff became the purchaser; and the mortgagee, on 24th March 1871, executed to him a conveyance of the premises, which were then in the possession of the surviving members of the family of B R and S. The plaintiff, having failed in a suit for ejectment against the parties in possession, who relied on the prior gift to S, sued the representatives of S L for damages for breach of the covenants for title contained in the unregistered deed of the 15th July 1865. Held that though, as in Tukaram v. Khandoji, 6 Bom., O. C., 134, and Sangappa v. Basappa, 7 Bom., A. C., 1, an unregistered document requiring registration may be admitted in evidence for certain purposes, yet it cannot be looked at so far as it affects the immoveable property comprised therein, nor so far as it is evidence of any transaction affecting such property, and that, excluding the part of the document of 15th July 1865 which purported to be the conveyance to B R, the covenant for title sued on in the present suit was itself ambiguous and uncertain; and there being nothing to connect the premises, to which the covenant related, with the premises conveyed to the plaintiff, no breach of the covenant sued upon had been proved. The Court being precluded by the operation of the Registration Act (III of 1877) from looking at the deed of 15th July 1865 so far as it was a conveyance, the defendants were not estopped from contending that, nothing having passed under it to B R, nothing had passed to the plaintiff under the subsequent deeds, and that consequently the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain this suit. RAJU BALU v. KRISHNARAY RAMCHANDRA . . . I. L. R., 2 Bom., 273

38. — and s. 17—Covenant in unregistered lease—Suit for specific performance.—The plaintiff leased a house to the defendant for three years by an unregistered instrument which contained a covenant by the lessee that he would purchase the house at a certain price on an event which took place. The plaintiff now sued for specific performance of the covenant. Held that the unregistered instrument was not admissible in evidence. The covenant sought to be enforced depended on the lease, and the latter being invalid for want of registration, the former must also fail: the suit therefore should be dismissed. SAMBAYYA v. GANGAYYA

39. — Admissibility in evidence independently of document sued on when unregistered.—In a case where it is made to appear that the cause of suit arises upon a document which by law requires registration, but has not in fact been registered, the plaintiff cannot be permitted to establish a claim independently of the document, the existence of which is shown. RAMPERSHAD v. 40. — Unregistered kabuliati—Suit for rent.—Where the contract between the parties to a rent suit is in no way disputed or denied, and the fact of certain lands having been taken at a certain rent is admitted, the only issue being whether the rent has been paid or not, the case may be tried notwithstanding that the kabuliati is inadmissible by reason of non-registration. DINONATH MOOKERJEE v. DEBNATH MOOKERJEE . . . 14 W. R., 429

41. — Inadmissibility for want of registration—Evidence in suit on document.—In a suit upon a razinama, the execution of which was admitted by the defendants, which purported to create an interest in immovable property, the Civil Judge dismissed the suit because the document had not been registered in accordance with Act XVI of 1864, s. 13. Held (reversing the decree of the Civil Judge) that the existence of the agreement not having been disputed, its production was not necessary, and that the plaintiff was entitled to whatever relief the effect of the plaint and answer taken together would entitle him on the admission of the defendant. CHEDAMBARAM CHETTY v. where the only disputed point being the fact of payment for which the production of the kabuliati was unnecessary, the dismissal of the suit for its non-registration was held unjustifiable.

42. — Inadmissibility of evidence where registrable document is not registered.—The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover rent due upon a muchilka executed by the defendant. The defendant admitted that he occupied the land under the express contract contained in the muchilka. The muchilka was a document the registration of which was compulsory under the Registration Acts, but was not registered. Held that the plaintiff could not establish his case without putting the muchilka in evidence, and it was inadmissible, not having been registered. MORRIS v. SAPANTHEETHA PILLAY

[6 Mad., 45]

43. — Evidence where contract is unregistered and therefore inadmissible.—Where defendant, after executing a bill of sale in respect of certain lands and receiving the full amount of purchase-money agreed upon, had repudiated the contract and refused to make over possession, it was held that, though the fact of the deed of sale not being registered precluded it, under s. 13, Act XVI of 1864, from being admitted as evidence, yet plaintiff was not excluded from showing by other evidence that he performed his part of the contract. There is nothing in that section which says that no contract purporting to create or transfer any right, title, or interest in land shall be recognised by the Civil Court unless reduced to writing. Held also that there was no reason why plaintiff should not be permitted to show that non-registration was owing, not to any fault of his own, but to the fraudulent conduct of his adversaries. HEMALOODDEEN v. CROWDERY ABDOL SUTTAR . . . 9 W. R., 351

44. — Unregistered document with possession—Evidence of possession.—An unregistered document, when followed by delivery of possession, may be used as evidence of that possession. LALLA GOPHER CHAND v. LIAKUT HOSSEIN

[35 W. R., 211]

45. — Admissibility in evidence—Intention of parties.—A sued B for recovery of possession of land which he alleged had been sold to him by B under a bill of sale. The bill of sale had been duly registered and was not disputed by B, but B produced an unregistered ikrarnamah, executed by A, to prove that the sale was not absolute, but only by way of mortgage. B alleged that the terms of the bill of sale were qualified and explained by the ikrarnamah. Held that the ikrarnamah was inadmissible in evidence, as it had not been registered under s. 13 of Act XVI of 1864, but that the Court might look at other and independent evidence, viz., the acts and conduct of the parties to throw a light upon their intention. PARABDI SAHANI v. MAHOMED HOSSEIN . . . 1 B. L. R., A. C., 37

46. — Agreement to have deed of partition drawn up.—An agreement to have a deed of partition drawn up in a particular form, even if not admissible in evidence without registration, can be put in, unregistered, as evidence of the intention of the parties. HEM ROY v. LALNUN ROY

47. ———— Receipt for sums paid on bond hypothecating immovable property—Admissibility in evidence—Parol evidence—Act I of 1872, s. 91, illus. (c).—A receipt for sums paid in part liquidation of a bond hypothecating immovable property must be registered under the provisions of s. 17 of Act VIII of 1871 to render it admissible as evidence under s. 49 of the said Act. Under illus. (c), s. 91 of Act I of 1872, such payments may nevertheless be proved by parol evidence, which is not excluded owing to the inadmissibility of the documentary evidence. DALIP SINGH v. 48. ———— Proof of unregistered mortgage by subsequent admission rejected—Evidence Act, s. 65 (b).—The defendant in an ejectment suit claimed to be in possession under a mortgage deed for Rs. 1,000, executed in 1865, but not registered, and a second mortgage-deed for Rs. 50 of the same date, in which the first mortgage was recited. Held that by virtue of s. 13 of the Registration Act, 1864, the first mortgage-deed could not be put in evidence, and that the defendant could not give secondary evidence thereof under s. 65 (b) of the Evidence Act. DIWETHI VARADA AYYANGAR v. KRISHNASAMI AYYANGAR
I. L. R., 8 Mad., 117

49. ———— Landlord and tenant—Entry under unregistered lease—Holding over—Proof of terms of lease.—The plaintiff sued in 1881 to recover certain land and arrears of rent from the defendant, alleging that the defendant's ancestor entered on the land as a tenant in 1865 under a lease for five years, which was not registered. The defendant denied the lease of 1865, admitted that she was the tenant of the land, but denied that she could be ejected, and claimed to deduct from the rent certain emoluments. Held that the plaintiff could not prove the tenancy alleged in the plaint, inasmuch as the lease of 1865 was not registered, and therefore could not eject the defendant. NANGALI v. RAMAN
[I. L. R., 7 Mad., 226]

50. ———— Unregistered lease—Proof of tenancy ejectment—Occupancy rights.—If a contract of lease is, for want of registration, ineffectual, the landlord is not debarred from giving other evidence of a tenancy and requiring the Court to adjudicate on his right to eject. Dictum in Nangali v. Raman, I. L. R., 7 Mad., 226, observed upon. VENKATAGIRI v. RAGHAVA. ZAMINDAR OF VENKATAGIRI v. RAGHAVA I. L. R., 9 Mad., 142

51. ———— Effect of a registered instrument confirming a prior one of the same purport not registered.—An instrument purporting to assign a right in immovables of more than the value of Rs. 100 [s. 17, sub-s. (b), of Act III of 1877], being unregistered, was ineffectual to affect the title of the purchaser. Some years after, the parties executed a deed of conveyance, making the same assignment, confirming the former instrument, and setting it forth in a schedule. The latter instrument was registered. In a suit in which the ownership of the property was contested, —Held that the fact of the prior deed not having affected the property, being unregistered, was no reason why the deed afterwards registered should not be admitted as evidence of title. In this there had been nothing contravening the object of the Registration Act. MITCHELL v. MATHURA DAS

52. ———— Inadmissibility in evidence of unregistered deed—Secondary evidence—Evidence Act, s. 91.—Plaintiff alleged that A and B had sold and conveyed, by an unregistered deed, certain land to the person under whom he claimed. The deed being inadmissible in evidence, B was called to prove the sale. Held that B's evidence should have been rejected, as secondary evidence of the unregistered deed could not be received. RAM CHUNDER HALDAR v. GOBIND CHUNDER SEN
I. C. L. R., 542

53. ———— Unregistered document—Admissibility of other evidence where document is not admissible—Admission.—The plaintiff sued to recover certain immovable property sold to him by the first defendant by a registered deed of sale executed on the 23rd of July 1868. The second, third, and fourth defendants pleaded a sale to them by the same party, the first defendant, on the 23rd March 1867, and that the first defendant, after receiving consideration in full, had improperly refused to have their deed of sale registered. The provisions of s. 49 of the Registration Act of 1866 precluded the reception in evidence of the prior unregistered instrument of conveyance, but the lower Courts held that certain admissions made by first defendant in an inquiry held before the registration officer were admissible in evidence to prove the sale to third and fourth defendants. The suit was therefore dismissed with costs. Upon special appeal, —Held by INNES and KINDERSLEY, JJ., that the admissions made by first defendant were evidence against plaintiff, as made by one from whom plaintiff derived his title, but that the provisions of the Registration Act precluded any effect being given to the sale evidenced by such admissions; there being a writing, the sale could not be proved by mere oral evidence. By INNES, J.—The term "instrument," in s. 49 of Act XX of 1866, is used on the understanding that the writing is not merely evidence of the transaction, but is the transaction itself. SOMU GURUKHAL v. RANGAMMAL
7 Mad., 13

54. ———— Suit to compel registration—Evidence of contract—Document being unregistered held inadmissible to prove the contract sought to be registered.—The defendants agreed to let certain premises to the plaintiff for a term of three years from the 1st of November 1883 at a monthly rent of Rs. 200. Subsequently to the making of the agreement, viz., on the 17th January 1884, the plaintiff caused a writing to be prepared, which, as he alleged, contained the terms of the lease agreed on, and, having signed it, handed it over to the defendants. The defendants did not sign it, and the document remained with them. The plaintiff alleged that he did not ask the defendants to sign it, as the defendants told him they would get a copy of it prepared, which they would sign and send to him. The defendants alleged that, at the time the document was given to them by the plaintiff, they objected to it on the ground that it was incomplete, inasmuch as it did not contain two of the terms agreed on which prohibited the plaintiff from sub-letting or altering the premises, and required him to maintain them in their then existing condition. The plaintiff denied these allegations of the defendants. In May 1884 the plaintiff, through his attorneys, called upon the defendants to lodge the document for registration. The defendants refused, and the plaintiff filed the present suit, praying—(1) that the defendants might be ordered to lodge the said document for registration and do all such acts as might be necessary to obtain registration thereof; (2) that, if necessary, another similar document might be prepared and registered; (3) that, in the alternative, the defendants should pay Rs. 4,000 damages. At the trial the plaintiff raised (inter alia) an issue as to the truth of the defendants' allegation that the agreement of lease comprised terms forbidding the plaintiff to sub-let or alter, etc. The defendants objected to the proposed issue. In the course of the hearing the plaintiff tendered the document of the 17th January 1884 in evidence. The defendants objected, on the ground that it was unregistered. The Court held that it was admissible as a mere writing, with reference to which, irrespective of its contents, the other evidence in the case was given. At the close of the plaintiff's case the defendants declined to call evidence, and judgment was given on all the issues in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants appealed, and contended that they were not bound to produce the document for registration, and that the Court was wrong in permitting the above issue to be raised and determined in this suit, and that, the document being inadmissible as evidence of the contract, no oral evidence of the contract was receivable. The plaintiff contended that there was an implied obligation upon the defendants to register the document arising from the fact that the document contained the true contract between the parties, and that the object of the suit being to compel registration, the document, although not registered, could be given in evidence to prove the contract between the parties. Held (reversing the decree of the Court below) that there was no obligation upon the defendants to produce the document for registration, and that they could not be compelled to do so. Held also that the object of giving the document in evidence being to establish the contract of lease for the purpose of drawing an inference from it, the document was for that purpose inadmissible, being unregistered, and that the Court below, although admitting it originally as merely a piece of paper, was wrong in using it as evidence of the contract between the parties. HURJIVAN VIRJI v. JAMSETJI NOWROJI [L. L. R., 9 Bom., 63]

55. — Suit for damages for breach of contract to execute a lease—Admissibility in evidence of an unregistered kabuliati to prove contract.—Defendant entered into an agreement with the plaintiff to lease a certain property to him. The plaintiff delivered the kabuliati to the defendant, and was put into possession of the property. The defendant did not execute the cowlie and did not register the kabuliati, and subsequently improperly deprived the plaintiff of his possession. Plaintiff brought a suit for damages for breach of contract. Held, on a question as to whether the kabuliati was admissible in evidence, having regard to s. 49 of Act III of 1877, since it had not been registered, that, since the plaintiff's action was not founded on an alleged title under a lease granted by the defendant, but was an action for damages for breach of the contract to execute the lease, the kabuliati was admissible in evidence to prove the contract. HURJIVAN VIRJI v. JAMSETJI NOWROJI, L. L. R., 9 Bom., 63, distinguished. RAJAH OF VENKATAGIRI v. NARAYANA REDDI . L. L. R., 17 Mad., 456

56. — Instrument of hypothecation—Endorsement of payment unsigned—Admissibility of evidence of endorsement to show payment.—The plaintiff hypothecated certain land to the defendant by a duly registered instrument, and subsequently paid off the debt and received back the instrument. At the time of payment the defendant made an endorsement on the bond to the following effect: "25th Kartik of Sukla. Rupees two hundred and sixty-three, principal including interest, was received on account of this bond, and there is therefore no lien whatever." Some time afterwards plaintiff discovered that what he had paid in redemption of the mortgage-claim was in excess of what was due, and he brought a small cause suit to recover the amount overpaid, tendering in evidence the endorsement on the bond. The objection was taken that the endorsement, not being registered, was not receivable in evidence under s. 49 of the Registration Act of 1866. The District Munsif dismissed the suit upon the ground that the endorsement was not signed by the defendant, and was therefore not admissible in evidence, but referred to the High Court the question whether the evidence was rightly excluded. Held by SCOTLAND, C.J., and INNES, J., that the fact of there being no signature to the endorsement was no objection to its reception as confirmatory evidence of the sum received by the defendant. By SCOTLAND, C.J.—That the endorsement was admissible evidence for the purpose for which it was offered, although not registered, the endorsement not being used as evidence of the creation or discharge of an obligation, but merely as confirmatory proof of a fact provable by oral evidence, although stated in writing. By INNES, J.—That the endorsement was admissible evidence, its reception not being precluded by the provisions of the Registration Act. VENKATARAMA NAIK v. CHINNATHAMBU REDDI . 7 Mad., 1

of a house purchased by him at a Court sale for Rs50. The plaint was filed on the 31st March 1873. No certificate of sale was filed with it; but plaintiff subsequently produced one, dated the 8th July 1873, and the Court admitted it in evidence. Defendant submitted that the suit should be dismissed, as no certificate was produced by the plaintiff with the plaint. The first Court made a decree in the plaintiff's favour. The Court of Appeal reversed that decree, and dismissed the suit, holding that the certificate ought not to have been received in evidence by the lower Court. The High Court, on second appeal, confirmed the decision of the lower Appellate Court, on the ground that the plaintiff had no right of action, as he had no registered certificate of sale at the date of the institution of the suit. HARRISANDAS NARANDAS v. 60. ———— and s. 17—Instrument affecting moveable and immovable property.—The widow, daughter, and divided brother of a deceased Hindu executed an instrument which provided for the distribution of his property, both moveable and immovable, as to which they had disputed. The document was not registered. The widow set up a will made by the deceased in her favour; the brother sued the widow for a declaration that the will was a forgery, but the Court held that it was genuine. He now sued the widow and daughter on the above instrument to recover his agreed share of the moveable property of the deceased. The widow set up the will, which the plaintiff averred was invalid according to the custom governing the family. Held that the unregistered instrument was admissible as evidence in support of the plaintiff's claim for the moveable property. THANDAVAN v. 61. ———— Unregistered contract for sale of land subsequently attached in execution—Evidence of transfer of ownership in property.—In execution of a decree against S and P, property was attached on the 11th February 1891 and sold by auction to the plaintiff in July 1891. The defendants, however, alleged that at the date of attachment the property did not belong to S and P, as they had sold it to them (the defendants) on the 22nd January 1891, under a contract of sale of that date. Their contract had not been registered. Held that by cl. (b) of s. 17 of the Indian Registration Act (III of 1877) the contract needed registration if it was intended that it should affect the land (s. 49). Not being registered, it did not operate to transfer the ownership, and could not be received in evidence of any transaction affecting the land, i.e., it could not be used to show that the ownership had passed from the vendor to the purchaser. The property in question was therefore, at the date of attachment, the property of S and P, and under the attachment and sale in execution it passed to the plaintiff. HORMASJI MANEKJI DADACHANJI v. The lease was not registered. After the lessee had held the land under the lease for two years, a suit for possession was brought against him, and the lessor and he were dispossessed and obliged to pay mesne profits. He then brought this suit against the lessor under the above clause in the lease. Held that the lease, being unregistered, was not admissible in evidence, and could not be looked at. The clause on which the plaintiff sued could not be separated from the lease itself, and the plaintiff's claim must therefore be rejected. GURUNATH SHERINIVAS DESAI v. CHENBASAPPA

In a suit to enforce the mortgage the one made by the widow was held to be invalid. Notes promising to pay interest, additional to that contracted for in the mortgages, had been signed by the husband, which, it was held, could not affect the right to redeem, being unregistered. TIKA RAM v. 65. ——— and ss. 3 and 47—Assignment of decree for sale of hypothecated property—Non-registration of deed of assignment—Civil Procedure Code, s. 232—Effect of subsequent registration.—The assignee of a decree for sale of hypothecated property applied, under s. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code, for execution of the decree, but objection being raised that the deed of assignment had not been registered, he subsequently applied for the return of the deed that it might be registered, and it was returned accordingly. The deed was afterwards duly registered. Held (i) that the deed of assignment was not a document which comprised immovable property within the meaning of s. 49 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), a decree for sale not being immovable property as defined in s. 3; (ii) that consequently, although the assignee might not, under the latter portion of s. 49, use the deed for the purpose of proving his title, there was no provision in the Act saying that he should not take title under the deed; (iii) that the position of the assignee when he made his application on the 18th November 1886 was that he was unable to prove that there was a title by assignment in himself; (iv) that the subsequent registration cured the absence of registration on the 18th November 1886, and, under s. 47 of the Registration Act, the document thereupon had full effect, and related back to its execution. ABDUL MAJID v. It was further found that the plaintiff had taken his assignment with notice of the above agreement and tender. The agreement was in writing, but not registered. Held that, though the agreement was not admissible in evidence as creating an interest in land, still it might be used for the purpose of obtaining specific performance, and the plaintiff, having purchased the equity of redemption with notice as above, was not entitled to redeem. ADAKKALAM v. S. 49, read with s. 60, only means that a document, to be admissible in evidence for the purposes of the former section, must be registered, i.e., the officer must, under s. 60, have put upon it the certificate required by that provision. If he has done so, the document bearing such certificate becomes admissible in evidence: if he has not, or there has been no registration of the document, then such document is inadmissible. Where the document bears such a certificate, it is registered within the meaning of s. 60, and becomes under the second paragraph thereof admissible in evidence, and the operation of the second paragraph is not interfered with by s. 49. Where therefore the lower Appellate Court rejected as inadmissible in evidence under s. 49 a deed-of-gift of immovable property upon which was endorsed a certificate under s. 60, on the ground that the person presenting it for registration and admitting execution was not qualified to do so under ss. 32 and 35, and the registration was consequently void and the document not registered under s. 17 (a).—Held that the Court was wrong in so doing, and ought to have looked at and dealt with the document. Har Sahai v. The words “duly registered” under that section mean duly registered under that Act, and not under any prior Act. The section has no application to cases where the contest is between an unregistered instrument whenever executed and a registered instrument executed before the Act came into force. It applies only to cases where the registered instrument is subsequent to the Act. A sold certain land to B by a sale-deed dated 15th July 1871. A sold the same land to the plaintiff by a deed of sale, dated 1st February 1872. The deed was registered, its registration being compulsory. I was unaccompanied with possession. In 1882 B obtained possession of the land from A's son, and sold it to the defendant by a sale-deed dated 14th October 1882. This deed was registered and accompanied with possession. In 1883 the plaintiff sued for possession of the land in dispute, relying on his registered deed of sale of 1st February 1872. The defendant relied on his vendor's sale-deed on the 15th July 1871. Held that under Act VIII of 1871, which governed the present case, there could be no competition between the sale-deeds of 1871 and 1872, the registration of the one being optional, whilst that of the other was compulsory. The registration of the plaintiff's deed therefore did not give it priority over the earlier deed under which the defendant claimed. Held also that the defendant's vendor by merely omitting to take possession of the land on his purchase was not guilty of any positive fraud or of any concealment or negligence so gross as to amount to fraud that would entitle the plaintiff to relief against him. SHIVRAM v. The deed of sale was not registered. On the 14th February 1864 D mortgaged, by a registered mortgage, the same two fields to B, who then knew that H was in possession of the fields as purchaser. Held that, according to the true construction of Regulation IX of 1827, s. 6, cl. 1, the title of H having been completed by possession, there was no property in the fields left in D to mortgage to B, and that therefore H (the purchaser) had a better title to the fields than B, the mortgagee. Semle—The effect would have been the same under the provisions of Act XVI of 1864 or of Act XX of 1866. 13. ————— Registered and unregistered deeds—Priority—Possession—Fraud.—Act XIX of 1843 gave the preference, generally speaking, to a subsequent kobala which was registered over a prior one unregistered. To avoid its operation, a plaintiff had to show that the vendor not only sold and parted with his rights in the property, but actually made over possession to him. mortgagee, whose mortgage-bond had been subsequently registered, on condition that he satisfied the claim of the decree-holder; otherwise the defendant to be entitled to possession on his satisfying the plaintiff's mortgage-claim. BRIKAJI v. VALLABHDAS [2 Bom., 209]

11. ————— Bom. Reg. IX of 1827—Prior unregistered sale with possession—Subsequent registered mortgage.—On the 15th December 1863 H purchased from D, for valuable consideration, two fields in the Satara district (to which the provisions of Regulation IX of 1827 and of Act XIX of 1841 as to registration were then applicable), and was duly put into possession of the fields. The deed of sale was not registered. On the 14th February 1864 D mortgaged, by a registered mortgage, the same two fields to B, who then knew that H was in possession of the fields as purchaser. Held that, according to the true construction of Regulation IX of 1827, s. 6, cl. 1, the title of H having been completed by possession, there was no property in the fields left in D to mortgage to B, and that therefore H (the purchaser) had a better title to the fields than B, the mortgagee. Sembla—The effect would have been the same under the provisions of Act XVI of 1864 or of Act XX of 1866. History of registration given, and the provisions of the different enactments relating to registration compared and discussed. BALARAM NEMOHAND v. APPA VALAD DUTU 9 Bom., 121

12. ————— Priority of deeds—Priority of title—Proof of authenticity.—Priority of registration gave priority of title under Act XIX of 1843 only when the authenticity of the document was proved. GANDHARKE DEBBA v. SONATUN PANDAY [10 W. R., 215]

13. ————— Registered and unregistered deeds—Priority—Possession—Fraud.—Act XIX of 1843 gave the preference, generally speaking, to a subsequent kobala which was registered over a prior one unregistered. To avoid its operation, a plaintiff had to show that the vendor not only sold and parted with his rights in the property, but actually made over possession to him. If, however, the second sale was illusory, proving fraud on the part of the vendor, it would not stand in the way of plaintiff's right. BUTOOLUN v. OZHERUN [8 W. R., 300]

14. ————— Registered and unregistered documents—Priority.—Plaintiff sued for possession of land under an unregistered deed of sale; and one of the defendants claimed the same land under a deed of subsequent date registered after the commencement of the suit. The latter deed was found to be fraudulently got up between the defendants. Held that the registration of such a document did not give it the effect of invalidating a former unregistered deed of sale. NARASANNA v. GAVAPPA [3 Mad., 270]

15. ————— Priority of registered over unregistered deed.—A Civil Court was held to have done right in giving priority to a lease registered under Act XVI of 1864, as against an unregistered conveyance of an earlier date. GOBIND CHUNDER ROY v. POORNO CHUNDER SEIN 10 W. R., 36

16. ————— Priority of registered over unregistered deeds.—Under s. 63, Act XVI of 1864, registered deeds were entitled to preference over unregistered deeds, even of that class the registration of which is optional; the practical distinction between the two classes being that deeds the registration of which is compulsory, if unregistered, will not be received in evidence at all; whereas deeds the registration of which is optional will be received in evidence, notwithstanding the absence of registration, though they must give way to registered documents of subsequent dates relating to the same property. MUNSOOR ALI v. AZMUT ALI 9 W. R., 282

GOOROO DASS DAN v. KOOSHOM KOOMAREE DOSSEE 9 W. R., 547

17. ————— Priority of registered over unregistered deed—Possession.—Where two parties claimed the same property by conveyance from the owner under registered deeds of sale of 1272, plaintiff's purchase and registration being of anterior date to those of defendant, who, besides being in possession, pleaded that he had, previously to plaintiff's purchase, obtained possession under a parol contract of sale, it was held that plaintiff was entitled to a decree, and that defendant could not set up the parol sale against the plaintiff's registered kobala of the same year, in the face of s. 63, Act XVI of 1864. BOIKUNTONATH SETT v. RUSSICK LOHL BURWONO [10 W. R., 231]

18. ————— Impeaching deed of sale registered so as to prevent operation of section.—For the purpose of impeaching a deed of sale registered under Act XVI of 1864, so as to prevent the operation of s. 68, it is necessary to show that the deed was fraudulently executed, and that the purchaser was wilfully and intentionally a party to the fraud of the vendor, or at least that the deed was executed without consideration. RAM CHAND KOOMAR v. MODHOOSOODUN MOZOOMDAR [7 W. R., 119]

19. ————— Priority of registered instrument—Deed registered under existing law.—Where an instrument was executed under the Registration Act, XIX of 1843, and was a valid instrument conferring a right or interest on the party in whose favour it was made, it does not become invalid by reason of the party not getting it registered within twelve months, nor is priority over it obtained by a subsequent conveyance which is registered under the Registration Law of 1864 or 1866. DOOLAL BIBEE v. NADA SHAHA 13 W. R., 446

20. ————— Priority of registered over unregistered deeds.—A genuine deed of sale given by the owner of an estate at a time when registration was not compulsory, cannot be invalidated by a subsequent deed given by that owner's heir and successor, the registration of which was compulsory by Act XX of 1866, merely on the ground that the last deed was registered, and the first was not. IWRIT SINGH v. 21. — Optional registration—Priority of deeds.—A deed the registration of which was not absolutely requisite under s. 49, Act XX of 1866, was not entitled to priority to a duly registered koba under s. 50 of that Act. MOFUZEL HOSSEIN v. GOLAM AMBIAH

22. — Priority of registered over unregistered deed.—In a suit by a purchaser of a howla tenure which defendant was proceeding to sell under an ex-parte decree which he had obtained upon a mortgage-bond executed by plaintiff's vendor,—Held that plaintiff's registered purchase, though of a subsequent date, must take effect as against defendant's unregistered mortgage, which might have been registered. ALI AZIM KHAN v. ISLAM KHAN

[14 W. R., 483]

23. — Priority of registered over unregistered deed—Lien.—Held that property sold in satisfaction of a superior lien cannot be held to have been sold subject to an inferior lien, and that a registered deed of a subsequent date has preference over an unregistered deed of prior date. SENZUL PERSHAD v. HUR CHUND SAHOO

1 Agra, 263

24. — Priority of deeds—Mortgage-deed—Deed of sale.—A lent B Rs 75 on 6th Asar 1273 (June 19th, 1866), and B executed a mortgage of two bighas of land for the amount in A's favour. On 23rd Asar (July 6th) B sold to C one bigha of the same land. A's mortgage was not registered; C's deed of sale was. A subsequently brought a suit for the amount owed him by B, and sought to attach the land mortgaged to him in execution. C preferred a claim to the property attached, on the ground that the land was his: his petition was allowed. A now sued to have the property mortgaged to him sold in execution of his decree, and to set aside C's purchase. Held that under ss. 18 and 50, Act XX of 1866, C's registered deed of sale must have preference over A's unregistered mortgage. GAYARAM MAZUMDAR v. MADHUSUDAN MAZUMDAR

25. — Conditional deed of sale—Priority of deeds.—A entered into an agreement with B to convey to him a certain portion of land for a consideration of Rs 98, of which Rs 60 had been paid as earnest-money. The agreement contained a proviso that, on A's refusal to convey the property within the time mentioned in the agreement, this document should operate as a conveyance, and A should forfeit his claim to the balance of the consideration. Before the expiry of the time mentioned in the agreement, A sold, by a registered deed, a portion of the property mentioned in the agreement. In a suit by B for possession of the property and for a declaration that the agreement operated as a conveyance,—Held that under cl. 1, s. 18, and s. 50 of Act XX of 1866, the subsequent registered conveyance had priority over the unregistered agreement. SHAMA CHURN NMOGI v. 26. — Priority of registered over unregistered instrument—San mortgage without possession in Guzerat.—Under s. 50 of the Registration Act, XX of 1866, a registered instrument takes effect, as regards the property comprised therein, against every unregistered instrument relating to it, whether or not the grantor of those instruments be the same. As between himself and his mortgagor, and also as against any subsequent unregistered assignee of the latter, an unregistered san mortgage in Guzerat has a perfectly valid charge upon the property mortgaged; but his right against such property is liable to be defeated by the mortgagor, or his heir, or such assignee conveying it to another by a registered instrument while his own title remains unregistered. Lakshmichand Walchand v. TARACHAND AMAR-CHAND* . . . I. L. R., 1 Bom., 574

32. ——— Priority—Registered and unregistered deeds—Optional and compulsory registration.—Deeds of sale, dated respectively the 22nd October 1868 and 7th February 1874, and registered, the former under Act XX of 1866 and the latter under Act VIII of 1871, are not thereby entitled to priority over an unregistered mortgage-deed dated the 18th June 1864, the registration of which was optional under Act XIX of 1848, where the consideration for the rival deeds exceeds R100. Quere—Whether in Kanara a mortgage without possession can be sustained against a subsequent purchase from the mortgagor with possession. *PARMAYA v. 33. ——— Priority—Lien created by sales under registered and unregistered deeds.—Where it appeared that a sale of the share for which plaintiffs held a conditional sale-deed had substantially taken place in satisfaction of two decrees obtained on two bonds, one unregistered and the other registered, and of a prior date to that of the plaintiff's mortgage-deed, Held that the share was not liable to a lien created subsequently to the registered deed; and though the plaintiffs might have, by reason of registration, a preferable right to that possessed by the decree-holder of the unregistered bond, yet they had no claim preferable to that of the decree-holder of the registered prior bond. MOTEE RAM v. KAISREE [2 Agra, 52]

34. ——— Unregistered mortgage defeated by subsequent registered sale.—V, having purchased land from N in March 1871 by a registered deed for R10, entered into and retained possession till ousted by K in 1880 in execution of a decree obtained by K against N upon an unregistered mortgage-deed dated 1869, conditioned to become an absolute sale within a certain date which had elapsed before suit was brought. Held that, under s. 50 of the Registration Act of 1866, K's title was defeated by V's registered sale-deed. *KANTETI VENKAYYA v. The deed of sale was duly registered, and C had been ever since in possession under it. The plaintiff sued A on his mortgage, and in that suit C intervened and was made a defendant. A did not appear in the suit. Held that, C having registered his deed of sale and being in possession, his title was good against the plaintiff. *Girija Singh v. 38. ——— Priority of registered over unregistered deed with possession.—In July 1864 two undivided brothers executed a mortgage of their joint property to the plaintiff for R500, and in January 1868 they executed another mortgage for R1,000 to the defendant, who registered it under Act XX of 1866. In a suit brought on the mortgage of 1864, a decree was made in October 1871 that, if the sum due were not paid within two months, the property should be sold, and in March 1872 the property was sold in execution of that decree, and bought by the plaintiff, who was duly put into possession. The defendant subsequently obtained a decree on the mortgage of 1864; the property was sold in execution of that decree, and was purchased by the defendant, who, dispossessing the plaintiff, was himself put into possession. In a suit brought to eject the defendant, Held that the mortgage of 1864 did not require to be registered in order to maintain its priority over that of 1868. VENKATA NARSAMMAH v. RAMIAH [1. L. Held, in a suit by H against U to recover possession of the mortgaged premises, that registration made U's mortgage complete, though he did not obtain possession of the mortgaged property at the time when the deed to him was executed, and that any subsequent dispossession of the equity of redemption by the mortgagor would be subject to his mortgage. UMAJI VALAD MAHAJI PALLI DUMALE v. 54. ———— Registered and unregistered documents—Act XVI of 1864.—S. 50 of the Registration Act, III of 1877, does not operate so as to exclude, on the ground of their non-registration, instruments executed before Act XVI of 1864 came into operation. TIRUMALA v. LAKSHMI

55. ———— Priority—Deed of sale registered under Act VIII of 1871.—S. 50 of Act III of 1877 is not retrospective in its application; and therefore a deed of sale registered under Act VIII of 1871, and not having, under that Act, priority over unregistered documents relating to the same property, acquires no new rights of priority by the passing of Act III of 1877, though coming within the larger class of registered documents which, by s. 50 of the later Act, have priority over unregistered documents. KANITKAR v. 56. ———— Priority between registered and unregistered documents—Optional and compulsory Registration Acts XVI of 1864, XX of 1866, and VIII of 1871 Interpretation of statutes.—The registration of documents under Act XVI of 1864, XX of 1866, or VIII of 1871, does not give them effect as against documents which might have been, but were not, registered under one of those Acts. S. 50 of Act III of 1877 has no retrospective operation upon such documents: the preference which it gives to registered over unregistered documents is confined to documents registered under Act III of 1877. According to the registration law as it stood before Act III of 1877 came into force, there was no competition grounded upon registration between documents optionally and documents compulsorily registrable. The Legislature, while possessing the power to divest existing rights, is not (in construing statutes) to be understood as intending to exercise that power retrospectively to any greater extent than the express terms of, or necessary implication from, its language requires. A and B (two brothers) purchased a house on the 19th July 1871, and mortgaged it to the plaintiff for Rs 585, by a mortgage, dated the 2nd July 1871, and duly registered. In 1874 the plaintiff sued upon his mortgage and obtained a decree, directing satisfaction of his claim by the sale of the house. The house was accordingly sold by the Court and purchased by the plaintiff for Rs 25. He obtained a certificate of sale, dated the 15th October 1875. The certificate was duly registered. On applying to the Court for possession of the house, the plaintiff was resisted by the defendant, on the ground that he was in possession under two mortgages, dated the 20th July 1871, and executed, the one by A and the other by B. These mortgages were not registered, both of them being for sums less than Rs 100. The plaintiff's application having been rejected by the Court he brought a suit for possession of the house. Both the lower Courts allowed his claim, holding that his mortgage and certificate of sale, being registered, were entitled to priority over the unregistered mortgages of the defendant under s. 50 of Act III of 1877. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that the case was governed by the law of registration as it stood before Act III of 1877 came into force, and that the registration of the plaintiff's mortgage and certificate of sale, both of which were compulsorily registrable, did not confer upon them any priority over the defendants' unregistered mortgages, which were optionally registrable. IOHHA RAM KALIDAS v. 57. ———— Sale under registered and unregistered deeds—Innocent purchasers.—Per GARTH, C.J.—The only reasonable construction of s. 50 of Act VIII of 1871 is, that where property under the value of Rs 100 is purchased by two innocent purchasers, the one by a registered and the other by an unregistered deed, and there is no fraud shown, or other circumstances which in equity would protect the unregistered purchaser against the registered, the title of the latter shall prevail. The section contains no such qualification as that a purchaser under an unregistered deed, who has obtained possession, would have priority as against a subsequent purchaser under a registered deed, and the Courts are not at liberty to import such a qualification into the section. Per PONTIFEX, J.—S. 50 is intended to apply to the case of two innocent purchasers, giving the preference to the one who has taken the greater precaution to secure his title, but is not intended to apply to the case of a subsequent purchaser who registers, but who at the date of his purchase had actual notice of a prior unregistered purchase. FUZULUDDEN KHAN v. Subsequently, S sold the remaining 6 annas to other persons; and then, on the 27th September 1876, sold another 1 anna share in the same property to B for Rs. 140, the bill of sale with respect to this purchase being duly registered under the provisions of Act III of 1877. In a suit by A, who had never obtained possession of the 1 anna share he had purchased, against S, B, and the purchasers of the other 6 annas shares,—Held that he was not entitled to succeed, as his bill of sale, being unregistered, was not entitled to priority over B's, which had been duly registered. *Lachman Das v. 69. ——— Registered and unregistered documents—Priority.—A vendor sold the same property twice over to different people, once by an unregistered conveyance (the purchase-money being under Rs100) giving to his vendee possession, and a second time to another person by a registered conveyance at a time when the first vendee was out of possession. Held by the Court (PRINSEP, J., dissenting), in a suit by the first vendee to recover possession, that the fact of a vendor having given possession to the first and unregistered purchaser, even if such possession continued to the date of the second conveyance, did not necessarily prevent the operation of that part of s. 50 of the Registration Act, 1877, which enacts that "a registered document shall take effect, as regards the property therein comprised, against every unregistered document relating to the same property." The only case in which the title of the prior unregistered purchaser can prevail against the subsequent registered purchaser for value is when the latter takes with notice of the title of the former. Per PRINSEP, J.—A purchaser under a registered conveyance subsequently executed cannot succeed in a suit to eject one who holds possession

AMMANNA. I. L. R., 3 Mad., 71

71. ——— Unregistered and registered documents—Priority.—S sued K in 1879 upon an unregistered hypothecation-deed, dated 8rd January 1870, securing repayment of a loan of Rs5 with interest. V intervened, and, being made second defendant, claimed to be mortgagee of the land hypothecated to S under registered deeds, dated 11th September and 30th November 1875, executed by K. Held that, under s. 50 of Act III of 1877, V had a priority over S. KALLACOLATHURAN v. SUBBAROYA REDDI. I. L. R., 3 Mad., 73

72. ——— Priority—Registered and unregistered documents.—S. 50 of the Registration Act, 1877, affects alike documents which it is optional, as well as those which it is compulsory, to register, and its effect is not modified by the fact that the subsequent registered purchaser buys with full notice of a prior unregistered encumbrance. Fazluddeen Khan v. 73. ——— Priority—Optional and compulsory registration—Possession.—G, having obtained possession of land under an unregistered agreement, the registration of which was optional, executed by S and N in 1872, was ousted in 1880 by K, who claimed the land under a registered sale-deed executed by S and N to him in 1879. Held that G was not entitled to recover the land by virtue of s. 50 of the Registration Act, 1877. KONDAYYA v. GURUVAPPA. I. L. R., 5 Mad., 139

74. ——— Priority—Registered and unregistered documents.—Certain land was hypothecated to T in 1861 to secure repayment of Rs2,000 and interest. The deed was never registered. In 1873 the land was mortgaged to K, and the mortgage was registered. In 1879, in execution of a decree—to which T was no party—upon this mortgage, the land was sold and bought by D, and the sale certificate registered. T then sued to recover the amount due upon the deed of 1861 by sale of the land. Held that the claim of T was not defeated by the sale to D. TIMMU v. DEVA RAI. I. L. R., 5 Mad., 265

75. ——— Mortgage—Priority.—A mortgaged certain land to B for Rs50 on the 13th November 1872 by an unregistered deed. On the 30th September 1876 A mortgaged the same land to C for Rs300 by a registered deed. On the 20th December 1877 A sold the same land to B for Rs70

by an unregistered deed. In 1879 C sued A upon his mortgage-deed, obtained a decree, and attached the land in B's possession. B objected, but his claim was rejected. Held in a suit by B to set aside the attachment by C that C's claim, being based on a document registered within the meaning of s. 50 of the Registration Act, 1877, was superior to B's claim, and that the suit must be dismissed. 76. ——— Land subject to an registered mortgage—Certificate of sale registered—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 316—Rights of purchaser.—Where land subject to an unregistered mortgage, the registration of which was optional, was attached and sold in execution of a money decree obtained against the mortgagor, and the purchaser registered his certificate of sale and obtained possession of the land.—Held that no question of priority under s. 50 of the Registration Act, 1877, could arise, inasmuch as the purchaser acquired only the right, title, and interest of the mortgagor subject to the mortgage. Sohagchand Gulabchand v. Bhairchand, I. L. R., 6 Bom., 893, approved and followed. Semle—A certificate of sale issued by a Court under s. 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure, if duly registered, takes effect under s. 50 of the Registration Act, 1877, against all unregistered encumbrances. 77. ——— Priority of mortgages.—First and second mortgages.—S and L held mortgage-bonds executed in their favour by the same person. S's bond was dated the 16th June 1872, and was registered, the registration being compulsory. L's bond was of prior date, the 20th December 1870, and was not registered, the registration being optional. Both instituted suits on their bonds against the obligor, and obtained decrees for sale of the property, the decrees being passed on the same day. The property was attached in execution of both decrees on the 14th August 1882. Held that the registered bond of the plaintiff took effect, as regards the property comprised in it, against the defendant's unregistered bond, under s. 50 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), which gave priority to the incumbrance created by the former bond over the incumbrance created by the latter, and this priority was not affected by the subsequent decrees obtained on the bonds, which only gave effect to the respective rights under the bonds. The meaning of s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, is that, when immoveable property is sold in execution of decrees ordering its sale for the discharge of incumbrances, the sale-proceeds are to be applied in satisfaction of incumbrances according to their priority. compulsory registration.—At a sale in execution of a decree, J purchased certain property which was at that time subject to two mortgages, the first under an unregistered deed in favour of M and dated in 1872, and the second under a registered deed in favour of L and dated in 1880. The registration of both deeds was optional, the former under Act VIII of 1871 and the latter under Act III of 1877. J subsequently satisfied the mortgage under the registered deed of 1880, which was delivered to him. M then brought a suit to recover the money due to him under the mortgage-deed of 1872 by sale of the mortgaged property. Held by OLMFIELD, J., that, applying the rule laid down by the Privy Council in Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Paromal Premshahdas, I. L. R., 10 Cal., 1035, J, having paid off the mortgage under the registered deed of 1880, should have the benefits of that mortgage, and was entitled to set up the deed which he held against the unregistered deed of 1872, against which, under s. 50 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), it would take effect, as regards the property comprised in it. Lachman Das v. Dip Chand, I. L. R., 2 All., 851, referred to. Per MAHMOOD, J., that the word "unregistered" in s. 50 of the Registration Act, 1877, must, in reference to the circumstances of the present case, be read as "not registered under Act VIII of 1871," and that, so reading the section, the registered mortgage-deed of 1880 was entitled to priority over the unregistered mortgage-deed of 1872. *Lachman Das v. 79. ——— Registered and unregistered documents—Mortgages under registered deed not entitled to priority over holder of subsequent decree on prior unregistered deed.—The mortgages under an unregistered hypothecation-bond, of which the registration was optional, obtained a decree thereon, and, in execution of such decree, attached the hypothecated property. Held, with reference to the terms of s. 50 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), that the bond, having merged in the decree, was entitled to take effect against a registered bond relating to the same property, and which was executed subsequently to the unregistered bond, but prior to the decree. *Kanhaya Lal v. 80. ——— Registered and unregistered documents—Mortgages under registered deed competing with holder of decree on prior unregistered mortgage-deed.—The words in s. 50 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), "not being a decree or order, whether such unregistered document be of the same nature as the registered document or not," mean that, if a decree has been obtained to bring property to sale under a hypothecation-bond or under a money-bond, and under that decree the property has been attached, that decree cannot be ousted by a subsequent registered instrument. The section cannot in any way make a decree effect a transfer of more than the interest which the judgment-debtor possessed. Held that a mortgage-deed registered under Act III of 1877 was entitled to priority over a decree obtained subsequently to the registration of such deed upon a prior unregistered deed of mortgage. *Kankaiya Lal v. 81. ——— Registered and unregistered documents—Priority—Mortgage under registered deed competing with auction-purchaser at a sale under a decree on a prior unregistered mortgage-deed.—Under s. 50 of the Registration Act, the decree or order which is not to be affected by a registered document must be a decree or order made prior to the execution and registration of the registered document. Therefore where the plaintiffs, who were mortgagees under a registered instrument, sued to set aside a sale to the defendants under a decree on an unregistered mortgage, the plaintiffs' registered mortgage being subsequent to the unregistered mortgage on which the defendants relied, but prior to the decree thereon, — Held that the defendants, auction-purchasers, must take subject to the rights of the plaintiffs as mortgagees. *Himalaya Bank v. 82. ——— Unregistered mortgage with possession—Subsequent registered mortgage—Notice—Priority.—The defendants 1 and 2, in 1877, placed the plaintiff's father (since deceased) in possession of certain land as usufructuary mortgagee under an unregistered mortgage-deed for 1899, and in 1883 mortgaged the same land to defendant 3 by a mortgage-deed, which was registered. Defendant 3 obtained a decree on his mortgage in 1886, and applied that the mortgaged premises should be sold. The plaintiffs, having opposed his application for an order for sale without success, now sued for a declaration of their title as mortgagees. It was found that defendant 3 took his mortgage with notice of the mortgage of 1877, but had not otherwise acted fraudulently. Held that the plaintiffs were entitled to priority in respect of the mortgage of 1877. Held by the Full Bench that, when it is proved that a subsequent encumbrancer under a registered conveyance had notice of a valid prior unregistered encumbrance and of possession by such encumbrancer, or of such conveyance without possession, the Courts are not bound to interpret the Registration Act of 1877, s. 50, so as to defeat the title of the prior encumbrancer. KRISHNAMMA v. take effect, as regards the property comprised therein, against every unregistered document relating to the same property, only applies where the two documents are antagonistic, not where effect can be given to each without infringement of the other: e.g., if A mortgages or sells to B, and afterwards C purchases at a Court's sale the then existing right, title, and interest of A, he (C) buys in the first case the equity of redemption, and in the second nothing at all. Registration therefore cannot help him, for on the very face of his certificate of sale the property comprised therein is not the property previously conveyed to B, but only the residue of A's estate after such conveyance. SOBHAGCHAND v. On the 23rd May 1881 the plaintiff purchased the same property from the same vendor under a registered deed of sale. In 1888 the plaintiff sued the defendant to establish his right to the property and to recover possession. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree, his registered deed taking priority to the prior unregistered deed of the defendant. 84. ——— Notice—Fraud—Optionally registrable sale-deed, unregistered, competing with similar deed registered.—R sold land to S in 1878 for R54 and put S in possession. In 1879 R sold the same land to N for R24-8-0. N registered his sale-deed. The sale-deed of S was not registered. In 1879 S sued N to have N's sale-deed cancelled on the ground of fraud. The lower Courts held that N's sale-deed was executed collusively and fraudulently, and decreed the claim. Held, on second appeal, that as there were grounds, apart from notice and knowledge of possession, for holding N's sale-deed to have been executed collusively, the decision was correct. NARASIMULU v. In a suit brought by the plaintiff to enforce his charge, Held that there was no conflict between the instruments, and the hypothecation-bond was enforceable, though unregistered. RAMACHANDRA v. 86. ——— Registered and unregistered mortgages—Possession—Priority—Notice.—On the 10th December 1866 M mortgaged certain immoveable property to the defendant for R95. The mortgage was neither registered nor accompanied with possession. On the 12th September 1869 M executed a mortgage of the same property to K for R200. That mortgage was registered, but not accompanied with possession. In 1876 K sued M on his mortgage of 1866. The defendant was not a party to that suit. While the suit was pending, M, on the 23rd February 1876, executed another mortgage of the property to the defendant for R200, including the amount then due to him (defendant) on his mortgage of 1866. That mortgage was registered and accompanied with possession. On the 8rd March 1876 K obtained a decree against M, directing satisfaction of the mortgage-debt out of the mortgaged property. The property was sold under that decree, and purchased by K himself for R50. He obtained a certificate of sale, dated the 8th March 1877, which was not registered. On the 25th July 1877 K sold the property to the plaintiff for R75-4-0. The deed of sale was not registered. In 1878 the plaintiff sued for possession of the property. The defendant relied upon his mortgages of 1866 and 1876. Held that the defendant's unregistered mortgage of 1866, which was optionally registrable, was not overridden by A's mortgage of 1869, which was compulsorily registrable, and that therefore the plaintiff, whose title was derived from K, was not entitled to recover the property from the defendant without redeeming the mortgage of 1866, on which he (defendant) was entitled to rely. The registration of K's mortgage in 1869 could not have operated as notice to the defendant when he was taking his mortgage in 1866, and therefore was not such a registration in relation to the defendant's earlier mortgage as to fall within the scope of the rule that registration is equivalent to possession. *LAKSHMANDAS SUBRUPHAND v. 97. — Acts XX of 1866 and VIII of 1871—Priority—Registered and unregistered documents.—On the 14th February 1869 S and M mortgaged a house and site to the plaintiff for Rs. 50. The mortgage was not registered. On the 16th June 1870 S (M being then dead) mortgaged the same property to the father of the defendant for Rs. 200. That mortgage was registered. On the 24th June 1871 S further mortgaged the property to the plaintiff for Rs. 6, including the amount due on the previous mortgage. This second mortgage was not registered. Possession was not given under any of the mortgages. In 1873 the defendant obtained a decree on his mortgage against S, and in execution of it purchased the property for Rs. 20 at a Court sale. The certificate of sale, dated the 9th July 1874, was registered, and the defendant was put in possession of the property under it. The plaintiff sued S on his second mortgage, and obtained a decree upon it in 1875. The defendant was no party to that suit. The plaintiff attached the property in execution of his decree, but the attachment was removed on the application of the defendant. In 1879 the plaintiff sued the defendant on his two mortgages, seeking to enforce them and his decree on the second mortgage against the property. The defendant contended that s. 50 of the Registration Act, III of 1877, operated retrospectively and conferred priority on his mortgage of 1870, in virtue of its registration, even over the plaintiff's earlier mortgage of 1869. Held that the plaintiff's unregistered mortgages, being each for a sum under Rs. 100, were, under the Registration Acts of 1866 and 1871, optionally, and not compulsorily, registrable; and that the Registration Act of 1866, under which the defendant's intermediate mortgage of 1870 had been registered, did not bestow any priority on it. Held also that s. 50 of the Registration Act III of 1877 was not retrospective in its application, and that, as registered purchaser at a Court sale, the defendant took subject to existing liens. Held further that the plaintiff's decree did not operate against the defendant, as he was not made a party to the suit in which that decree was obtained, although the plaintiff had constructive notice of the defendant's mortgage through registration. *RUPCHAND DASDUSA v. 98. — Act XX of 1866, s. 50—Priority—Notice of prior unregistered mortgage—Possession—Right to redeem—Parties.—On the 24th September 1869 G mortgaged certain land to H. Subsequently, on the 14th June 1870, he mortgaged the same land to P. Both the mortgages were for sums less than Rs. 100. The mortgage to H was unregistered, but the subsequent mortgage to P was registered. On the 21st June 1873, in a suit to which P was not a party, H obtained a decree on his mortgage, and at the execution sale he himself became the purchaser, and was put into possession of the land under his certificate of sale. On the 21st September 1874, P assigned his mortgage to the plaintiff. The deed of assignment was not registered; neither P nor his assignee, the plaintiff, ever had possession under the mortgage of 1870. The plaintiff brought this suit to obtain possession of the land. Both the lower Courts dismissed the plaintiff's claim. On special appeal to the High Court, — Held that, if P, at the time of taking his registered mortgage in 1870, had notice of the prior unregistered mortgage to H, he had that which it is the object of the registration law to give, and consequently the non-registration of H's mortgage could not, under Act XX of 1866, avail either P or the plaintiff who claimed under him by an assignment executed subsequently to the decree in H's mortgage-suit. A subsequent registered purchaser or mortgagee cannot avail himself of the registration of his deed against a prior unregistered purchase or mortgage of which he had notice. The High Court reversed the decrees of the Courts below, and remanded the case to the District Judge, to ascertain whether P, at or before the time of the execution of his registered mortgage, had notice of the prior unregistered mortgage to H. *SHIVRAM v. 99. — Acts XX of 1866 and VIII of 1871—Priority—Effect of possession under earlier unregistered document—Notice.—The plaintiff and the defendant claimed certain land, the latter under an unregistered deed of sale dated the 1st April 1877, the former under a registered deed of mortgage of later date, viz., the 19th September 1877. The defendant alleged that immediately after his purchase he was put into possession of the field, and had been in possession ever since. Both the lower Courts held that the plaintiff was entitled to the land. On appeal to the High Court, — Held that, assuming that the defendant had been in possession when the mortgage-deed was executed to the plaintiff, or that the plaintiff had otherwise notice of the defendant's prior purchase, the plaintiff could derive no advantage from the registration of his mortgage,—possession by, or registration of the title of, a purchaser or mortgagee prior in point of time being notice of that title to subsequent purchasers and mortgagees. *DUNDAYA v. mortgagor as tenant to mortgage. Effect of—Notice. —By an unregistered deed of sale, dated the 1st June 1881, the first defendants sold to the plaintiff, for Rs. 90, certain land which had been previously mortgaged with possession by him to the plaintiff. The first defendant had remained in possession subsequently to the mortgage as the tenant of the plaintiff under a lease which was not registered. On the 16th April 1883, the first defendant sold the property to defendant No. 2, who registered his deed, took actual possession of the land, and got it transferred to his name in the revenue books. The plaintiff now sued to recover possession from defendant No. 2, who contended (inter alia) that his deed, being registered, was preferable to the plaintiff's prior, but unregistered, deed of sale. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff's claim. The defendants appealed to the District Judge, who reversed the lower Court's decree. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court, — Held, confirming the decree of the lower Appellate Court, that defendant No. 2, having registered his deed of the 16th April 1883, was entitled, under s. 60 of Act III of 1877, in priority to the plaintiff, whose deeds were not registered, although earlier in date. It was contended for the plaintiff that the possession of the defendant No. 1 as tenant to the plaintiff subsequently to the mortgage and sale of the land to the plaintiff was the possession of the plaintiff, and that such possession operated as constructive notice of the plaintiff's title to defendant No. 2. Held that the possession by defendant No. 1 as mortgagor was not notice to defendant No. 2 of the plaintiff's title. Defendant No. 1 being the vendor of the land to defendant No. 2, the latter could have no reason to suppose that he was in possession otherwise than as owner. MOHESHWAR BALKRISHNA v. DATTU

106. ————— Priority of registered over unregistered mortgage—San-mortgage optionally registrable, but not registered—Subsequent mortgage registered—Delivery of possession—Purchaser at sale in execution of decree—Notice.—In 1875 the land in dispute was mortgaged to defendant No. 2 under two san-mortgage bonds, which were optionally registrable, but were not registered. In 1885 the land was mortgaged to plaintiff by a registered mortgage accompanied with possession. In 1886 the defendant No. 2 obtained a decree upon his san-mortgage bond, in execution of which the mortgaged property was brought to sale and purchased by defendant No. 3. Defendant No. 3 was afterwards put in possession by the Court. Thereupon the plaintiff sued to enforce his mortgage-lien against the property in the hands of defendant No. 3, who pleaded that the san-mortgages of 1875 were entitled to priority over the plaintiff's mortgage of 1885, and that he as purchaser at a sale under a decree obtained upon the san-mortgages held the property free from the plaintiff's claim. Held that the plaintiff's mortgage, having been executed and registered after Act III of 1877 had come into force, was entitled to priority over the unregistered san-mortgage bonds under s. 10 of the Act. A san-mortgage is not within the exceptions mentioned in s. 10 of the Act. Held also that, under s. 47 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), the plaintiff's registered mortgage began to operate from the date of its registration, and was not affected by the decree subsequently obtained upon the earlier mortgages. By the custom of Gujarat transfer of possession, which is necessary under general Hindu law, is not essential to validate san-mortgages, and such mortgages have always been held valid charges as between mortgagor and mortgagee, but they are liable to be defeated in case of the transfer of interest to third parties under registered instruments. Apart from the doctrine of equitable notice, registration under Act XVI of 1864 and Act VIII of 1871 conferred no priority on a registered document as against a document the registration of which was optional. Since Act III of 1877, however, the competition obtains in a more general form, and confers priority on all documents required to be registered, and registered since Act III of 1877 was passed, over all prior unregistered deeds of an antagonistic character. JETHABHAI DATALJI v. 109. ————— Unregistered san-mortgage—Sale—Subsequent unregistered mortgage of same property—Decree on latter mortgage and sale in execution—Sale certificate registered—Priority.—One Harilal and his sons Baji and Chhagan executed a san-mortgage of certain ancestral property in plaintiff's favour in 1885. The mortgage was unregistered. In 1886 the same property was mortgaged by Chhagan alone by a deed which was also unregistered. In 1889 Chhagan's mortgagee obtained a decree on his mortgage for sale of the mortgaged property, and in execution put up the property to auction in 1892, when defendant purchased it. Defendant got his sale-certificate registered. In 1894 the plaintiff brought this suit to enforce his mortgage-lien by sale of the mortgaged property. The defendant contended that, as to Chhagan's share, his certificate of sale having been registered, his claim had priority to the plaintiff's unregistered mortgage. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. His claim was superior to the defendant's. The defendant had purchased the interest which Chhagan had mortgaged in 1885. But that mortgage was unregistered, and was therefore subject to the plaintiff's mortgage, which, although also unregistered, was earlier in date. The defendant, by registering his certificate of sale, could not enlarge the estate which the certificate conveyed to him. MAGANLAL v. SHAKRA GIRDHAR

however, had purchased the land from one V on the 22nd March 1876, and the deed of conveyance to him of that date was not registered. On the 2nd April 1894, the sons of V (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) sold the land to the third defendant by a deed of that date which was duly registered. The third defendant contended that the plaintiff's title depended on the unregistered deed of the 23rd March 1876, executed by V (father of his vendors), and that his (defendant's) purchase by registered deed dated 2nd April 1894 had priority. Held that the plaintiff's claim must be dismissed. They were mere strangers to the land, unless they could rely on the unregistered conveyance by V to Harichand of the 23rd March 1876, but this conveyance had no effect when brought into competition with the registered conveyance to the third defendant of the 2nd April 1894. Though registration is notice of registered documents, it is not notice of unregistered documents under which holders of registered documents derive title. CHUNILAL v. PREMJI. MAHWADI v. 111. ——— Unregistered sale of land valued under R100—Subsequent registered hypothecation—Possession of first purchaser for over twelve years—Registered hypothecation defeated by such possession.—The owner of land, having in 1876 sold and given possession of it for R95 to the plaintiff under an instrument which was not registered, hypothecated it in 1878 to a third party, under a bond that was registered. The land was wrongly represented in the hypothecation-bond as being in the original owner's possession. The third party in 1882 sued the original owner on the hypothecation-bond without making plaintiff a party, and obtained a decree, which in 1893 he assigned to defendant, who purchased the land in the course of execution. On plaintiff suing for a declaration of his right to the land, —Held that the hypothecation had been defeated by plaintiff's possession for a period exceeding twelve years prior to the institution of the suit. A hypothecation right so created is liable to be affected not only by lapse of time as between creditor and debtor, but also by possession of the hypothecated property for the requisite period by a third person on a claim inconsistent with the rights of both the creditor and the debtor. Nor does s. 50 of the Registration Act interfere with the operation and effect of limitation and prescription governing such a case as this. NALLAMUTTU PILLAI v. BETHA NAIOKAN

113. ——— Mortgage—First and second mortgages—Registered and unregistered documents—Fraudulent transfer—Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882, s. 53.—Apart from any question of equitable estoppel, such as described by LORD CAIRNS in the Agra Bank v. Barry, where one person takes a possessory mortgage of property with full knowledge and notice that another is already in possession of such property under an earlier instrument of a similar kind, he cannot be said to be acting in good faith, and the principle of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) is applicable to such a transaction. In such a condition of circumstances, quoad the prior title, though created by an unregistered instrument, the status of the second mortgagee under his registered document is affected by his own mala fides; and as, on the one hand, the first mortgagee might avoid it on the ground that it was executed in fraud of him, so, on the other, the second mortgagee cannot, on the strength of his own fraud, pray in aid the provisions of the registration law to give preference to an instrument which records a transaction that, in its inception, being fraudulent, was a nudum pactum. Such document would not be a "document" in the sense of s. 50 of the Registration Act, 1877, which term, as therein used, means a document legally enforceable. Rahmatulla v. Sariatala, 1 B. L. R., F. B., 58, referred to. In a suit for possession of immoveable property by virtue of registered instrument of mortgage executed in 1833, against a defendant in possession of the same property under an unregistered mortgage-deed of 1881 (both deeds being instruments the registration of which was not compulsory), it was found as a fact that at the time of the execution and registration of his mortgage-deed the plaintiff was aware that the defendant was in possession under his mortgage. Held that, under these circumstances, the fact that the plaintiff's deed was registered did not entitle him to dispossess the defendant by virtue of the provisions of s. 50 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). RAM ATTAR v. The Registrar gave a copy of the will under s. 46 of the Act, but refused to part with the original. On application by the executors for a citation to the Registrar General to bring the will into Court, and deposit it with the Ecclesiastical Registrar, —Held that the original should be brought into Court, where alone the factum of the will could be tried and determined; and that a copy, authenticated under s. 65 of the Act, was not sufficient. execution—Validity of registration—Hindu law—Gift—Possession—Construction of instrument of gift.—S, on the 2nd September 1874, executed an instrument of gift in favour of his two daughters and his adopted son whereby he gave them "his houses and shops, and other moveable and immovable property, and his l. an transactions," in equal one-third shares. As S was unable to appear at the registration office by reason of sickness, N, his adopted son, on the same day presented such instrument for registration, and applied for the issue of a commission for his examination, which the registering officer issued. The commissioner went to S's house on the next day, but before he arrived S had died. He examined the attesting witnesses to such instrument, who stated that it had been executed by S, and he was informed by N that it had been so executed. On the next day N and the attesting witnesses and the writer of such instrument appeared before the registering officer, and the witnesses and writer were examined by him. Being satisfied that S had executed such instrument, the registering officer admitted registration, recording that the execution was admitted by N. N's signature was not endorsed on such instrument. M, one of S's daughters, subsequently sued N for one-third of her father's property, including his share in such partnership business, basing her suit on such instrument. The bond, with the deed of sale annexed thereto, was presented for registration. By mistake or for some other reason the particulars to be endorsed on a document admitted to registration, and the certificate showing that a document has been registered, were endorsed on the deed of sale and not on the bond. Held that, assuming that the bond had been registered, it was doubtful whether such an obvious attempt to defeat the provisions of the registration law should be permitted to succeed; that, whether there had been a mistake and the certificate of registration really applied to the bond or not, the provisions of ss. 58, 59, and 60 of the Registration Act had not been complied with, and the bond was to all intents and purposes unregistered; and that the defect was not a "defect of procedure" within the meaning of a. 87, which could be passed over. MATHURA DAS v. MITCHELL

In the same case on appeal to the Privy Council it was held, reversing this decision, that the bond was duly registered, and that the fact that the prior deed had not affected the property, being unregistered, was no reason why the deed afterwards registered should not be admitted as evidence of title. In this there had been nothing contravening the objects of the Registration Act. MITCHELL v. MATHURA DAS

————— Refusal to register—Petition by vendor to have document registered—Person “claiming” under document.—A deed of sale executed by the vendor alone, which recited that the vendor had received the purchase-money, and that the purchaser had been put into possession, was presented for registration by the vendor, the purchaser not being present. The Registrar refused to register the document, on the ground that the deed had not been delivered and no consideration had passed, the vendor having stated that he had not received the purchase-money. In refusing to register, the Registrar believed that the deed was of the vendor's own creation. The vendor applied by petition to the High Court to establish his right to have the document registered. The alleged purchaser repudiated the sale. Held (by the majority of the Full Bench) that, as it appeared on the face of the document itself that the petitioner was not a person “claiming” under it, the petition could not be entertained under the provisions of s. 73 of the Registration Act. Per STUART, C.J.—That the mere fact that it did not appear on the face of the deed that the petitioner could claim under it did not preclude the Court from entertaining the petition, but that, under the circumstances of the case, the registration of the deed should not be ordered. Per OLDFIELD, J.—That it was the duty of the Court to order the registration of the deed, as it was executed and the requirements of the law fulfilled, without entering into the question whether or not the petitioner could claim under it. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BISH NATH

All that is required in order to maintain a suit under s. 77 is that there must be a refusal to register by the Sub-Registrar, an appeal within time to the Registrar, a refusal by the Registrar, and a suit filed in the Civil Court within one month from the order of the Registrar refusing registration. *SHAMA CHARAN DAS v. When the deed was executed and taken to the registry office, A objected to the registration, on the ground that the full price had not been paid, and the Deputy Registrar returned the deed to him, and he sold the property to other parties. Held it was a suit to enforce a contract from which the vendor had receded, and, notwithstanding the subsequent sale to a third party and registration of such subsequent deed, there was nothing in the registration law to prevent plaintiff from enforcing this contract. BHEEMUL MATHCON v. In a suit against the owner and the Company for possession of the se-patni talukh, for damages caused by the refusal to register, and also for compelling registration of the se-patni pottah, — Held that the suit was not maintainable in a Civil Court, as the plaintiff's title rested upon an unregistered deed; that there was no cause of action as against the company to enforce registration of the pottah; and that a distinct stipulation is not necessary to bind a person to cause registration of a deed required by law to be registered, but he virtually

There is nothing in ss. 76 and 77 to compel the Registrar, in cases where there has been no express denial of execution, but where the executant refuses to attend at his office, to make his order of refusal within the time limited for admission of execution by ss. 23 and 24. 34. — Suit to compel registration

—Discretion of Registrar in acceptance of document for registration under s. 24 of the Registration Act—Registrable document with another document annexed, the latter, if presented by itself, being beyond time—Registration Act (III of 1877), ss. 24, 34, and 75.—A registrable document, which had been executed by the plaintiff on the one part and by the defendants T and one M on the other part, was accepted for registration by the Sub-Registrar of Bombay after four months from the date of execution under s. 24 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). M subsequently admitted execution and the document was registered as against him; but the defendant T objected to its registration, and the Registrar refused to register it. The plaintiff then brought this suit under s. 77 of the Registration Act praying for an order directing the registration of the document. The defendant contended that the document ought not to have been accepted for registration without inquiry as to whether the failure to present it within four months had been caused by urgent necessity or unavoidable accident, and at the hearing of the case counsel for the defendants proposed to ask the Registrar's clerk in his examination whether any such inquiry was made. Held (in the original Court by FULTON, J.), following Durga Singh v. Mathura Das, I. L. R., 6 All., 460, that the question should be disallowed, the Court having no jurisdiction to inquire into the exercise of the Registrar's discretion under s. 24 of the Registration Act. Held on appeal by FARRAN, C.J., and STRACHEY, J., that when a Registrar has directed under s. 34 that the document shall be accepted for registration, the Court cannot inquire under ss. 77 and 24 into the propriety of that direction. Durga Singh v. Mathura Das, I. L. R., 6 All., 460, approved of and followed. The proviso to s. 34 allows a further period of four months (in addition to the four months allowed by s. 24) within which to appear subject to the conditions set out in the proviso. The defendants executed and delivered two documents, A and B, to the plaintiff, A being an agreement of equitable mortgage, and B an agreement that they would register A and do all things necessary therefor, and, in case they failed to do so, to pay whatever the plaintiff could claim under A if it had been registered. The plaintiff obtained an order for the registration of A, but failed to present it for registration within thirty days after such order as required by s. 75 of the Registration Act, and when he did present it, registration was consequently refused. He subsequently lodged document B for registration with A as an annexure to it, and it was accepted on payment of a penalty under s. 24 of the Registration Act. The Registrar, however, refused to register B on the grounds (1) that without A there would be nothing to show to what property B referred, and (2) to register A as an annexure to B would be contrary to the provisions of s. 75, which limited the time for registration to thirty days. The plaintiff then brought this suit under s. 77 praying for an order for the registration of B with its accompaniment A within thirty days from the date of decree. Held (in the original Court by FULTON, J.) that B, being a registrable document of which execution had been admitted, and it having been presented within time and accepted under s. 24 of the Registration Act, ought to be registered, the document A being copied out as an annexure. Decree accordingly. Quare—As to the effect such registration might have on A, and whether it would render it efficacious as a registered document. Held on appeal by FARRAN, C.J., and STRACHEY, J., that the decree ordering the registration of B was correct. The document was a mere personal covenant to do a particular act with reference to a particular document. There was nothing on the face of it to show that the accompanying document referred to in it related to immoveable property. The registering officer would travel out of his functions if he were to institute an inquiry as to what was the nature of the document referred to. Held also (varying the decree of the lower Court) that document A should not be copied as an annexure to document B. If document A were in the nature of a schedule or appendix to document B, then the two documents could be registered as one; but as they appeared to be two distinct documents separately stamped and executed for different objects, they could not be so registered. The Registrar had no power to inquire what document was referred to in the document he was asked to register. If he could not register the two documents as one, neither could the Court do so under s. 77. TULLOCKCHAND HARNATH v. GOKULBHOY MULCHAND . . . I. L. R., 21 Bom., 724

7. ——— Prayer for general relief—Plaint, Relief inconsistent with.—Upon a prayer for general relief, a plaintiff is not entitled to any relief which is inconsistent with his pleadings; therefore, where a plaintiff brought a suit to set aside his father's will, on the ground that he had no power to dispose of his property, but that the plaintiff was entitled as eldest son and heir-at-law according to Hindu law, the suit should have been dismissed with costs, and no account should have been decreed to the plaintiff in respect of his interest in a portion of the property, the bequest of which was, in the opinion of the Court below, void for remoteness. *HIRALAL MULLICK v. 18. ————— Form of decree not indicated in the plaint, but indicated in the issues—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 146, 147.—In a suit by the head of an adhinam for declarations that a muth was subject to his control, that he was entitled to appoint a manager, that the present head of the muth was not duly appointed, and his nomination by his predecessor was invalid: and for delivery of possession of the moveable and immoveable properties of the muth to a nominee of the plaintiff, it was admitted that the defendant had succeeded to the management of the muth under the will of his predecessor, and that he was not a disciple of the adhinam, and it was found (1) that on the evidence as to the usage in the establishment in question the head of the muth is entitled to appoint his successor, but his election is limited to members of the adhinam: and the head of the adhinam is entitled to enforce this rule, though he is bound to invest a disciple properly nominated by the head of the muth; (2) that the defendant not being a disciple of the adhinam, his appointment was invalid, and the head of the adhinam was entitled to see that a competent member of the adhinam was appointed in his stead. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to declarations based on the two last-mentioned findings since they were comprised in the issues framed under ss. 146 and 147 of the Code of Civil Procedure, although the appropriate form in which the decree should be passed was not indicated with precision in the plaint itself. *GIYANA SAMBANDHA PANDARA SANNADHI v. 19. ————— Relief not asked for—Variation between pleadings and proof.—The plaintiff, alleging that a certain lane was his property, and that he had been obstructed by the defendants from building a door upon it, sued for an injunction and for damages. The Court held that the plaintiff's title to the land was not established, but passed a decree declaring that both the plaintiff and the defendants were entitled to use the lane by right of easement. Held that this declaration, which had not been asked for, should not have been made, and that the suit should have been dismissed for want of proof of the title alleged by the plaintiff. *SAMBAYYA v. 2. ——— Right to relief—Relief consistent with facts stated in plaint.—A plaintiff is entitled to ask for any remedy which the Court may think proper upon the state of facts disclosed in his plaint and established by the evidence, and a mistake in asking for a particular remedy will not debar him from some other remedy similar in its nature, and not more extensive, provided it requires no change in the facts. NUDIAR CHAND SHAHA v. PRANNATH SHAHA

3. ——— Mistake by plaintiff as to relief to which he is entitled—Special relief.—Where a plaintiff mistakes the relief to which he is entitled in his special prayer, the Court may afford him the relief to which he has a right under the prayer for general relief, provided it is such relief as is agreeable to the case made by the plaint. *NISTARINI DASI v. 5. ——— Prayer for general relief—Ignorance of exact relief entitled to.—It may very well be that a plaintiff, being doubtful as to the precise form of relief to which the facts proved may entitle him, may ask the Court to give him such relief as, under the circumstances, the Court may think fit to give. *GUNGARAM DUTT v. [1 C. L. R., 144]

6. ——— Specific relief—Prayer for general relief.—Under the prayer for general relief, specific relief may be granted of a different description from the specific relief prayed for by the bill; provided the bill contains charges putting in issue material facts which will sustain such relief. COCKERELL v. DICKENS

[2 Moore's I. A., 353]

7. ——— Prayer for general relief—Plaint, Relief inconsistent with.—Upon a prayer for general relief, a plaintiff is not entitled to any relief which is inconsistent with his plaint; therefore, where a plaintiff brought a suit to set aside his father's will, on the ground that he had no power to dispose of his property, but that the plaintiff was entitled as eldest son and heir-at-law according to Hindu law, the suit should have been dismissed with costs, and no account should have been decreed to the plaintiff in respect of his interest in a portion of the property, the bequest of which was, in the opinion of the Court below, void for remoteness. HIRALAL MULLICK v. MATILAL MULLICK

8. ——— Relief inconsistent with pleadings.—A party may have subordinate rights awarded when they arise out of the principal right which he pleads. But when a defendant pleads distinctly a jaghirdar's proprietary right against a malik's proprietary right, a Court cannot award a subordinate right of occupancy in no way arising out of a jaghirdar's proprietary right, but out of a raiyati right never pleaded by the defendant, and in fact incompatible with his case. PANDEY BISHONATH ROY v. BHYRUB SINGH

[7 W. R., 145]

9. ——— Alternative relief—Prayer for relief beyond powers of Court.—Where the plaintiff claimed possession, but, in the event of the defendants being found entitled to hold as tenants, asked the Court to ascertain at what rate the defendants were entitled to hold, and direct a lease to be executed,—Held that, whether the plaintiffs could obtain the alternative relief prayed for or not, their suit ought not to be dismissed, as they might succeed in proving their title to the substantial relief sought. LAND MORTGAGE BANK OF INDIA v. NERLOO BHUTTO

[21 W. R., 125]

10. ——— Alternative case where there is no inconsistency between alternatives.—Where the title on which a plaintiff sues is put forward in the alternative, and the two parts of the alternative are not inconsistent with each other, he ought to obtain a decree if he makes out either branch of his alternative. WOODIT SINGH v. BHUGWAN DOSS . . . 7 W. R., 180

13. ———— Plaint asking for more than plaintiff is entitled to.—Where a plaintiff asks for more than the plaintiff is entitled to, the Court may give him such relief as is within the Court's jurisdiction, and as the Court may deem him entitled to. *PITAMBUR SHAHA v. The plaintiff, who was in possession under the mortgage of 1885, prayed in this suit that the prior mortgage be declared fraudulent and void, and the sale in execution be set aside, and in the alternative that she be declared entitled to redeem the prior mortgage. The plaint was stamped as in a redemption suit, and the Court of first appeal passed a decree for redemption. Held that the suit should be dismissed, since after the sale of the mortgaged premises in execution of the decree obtained by defendant 2, the only right which remained to the puisne mortgagee was the right to retain possession until her mortgage should be redeemed. Seemle—Per BAST, J.—It is open to a plaintiff who is not a party to the transaction in respect of which allegations are made to come into Court seeking relief in the alternative, dependent upon what may be found by the Court to be the true facts of the case. Quare—Whether the Court can pass a decree for redemption when the plaint seeks only a declaration of the right to redeem. PERUMAL v. 21. ——— Alternative reliefs—Suit for possession alleging partition, but failing to prove it—Variance between pleading and proof.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the northern half of a certain plot of land, alleging that it had fallen to his share at a partition made in 1887, and that he was illegally dispossessed thereof by the defendant in 1891. He also prayed in the alternative that, if the alleged partition were not proved, the land should be partitioned, and his share awarded to him. The suit was dismissed by the lower Courts on the ground that the alleged partition was not proved, and that no order for partition could be made in the face of the plaintiff's distinct allegation that it had already taken place. Held that the plaintiff's allegation of partition did not preclude him from seeking the alternative relief on the strength of his general title. NINGAPPA v. RELIGION, OFFENCES RELATING TO—

1. ——— Disturbing religious assembly—Penal Code, s. 296—Mahomedan law—Hanafa and Shafia schools—Right to say "Amin" loudly during worship—Bengal Civil Courts Act (VI of 1871), s. 24—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 57 (1)—Mahomedan Ecclesiastical law—Judicial notice.—A masjid was used by the members of a sect of Mahomedans called the Hanifis, according to whose tenets the word "Amin" should be spoken in a low tone of voice. While the Hanifis were at prayers, R, a Mahomedan of another sect, entered the masjid, and in the course of the prayers, according to the tenets of his sect, called out "Amin" in a loud tone of voice. For this act he was convicted of voluntarily disturbing an assembly engaged in religious worship, an offence punishable under s. 296 of the Penal Code. The Full Bench (MAHMOOD, J., dissenting) ordered the case to be re-tried, and that, in re-trying it, the Magistrate should have regard to the following questions, namely:—(1) Was there an assembly lawfully engaged in the performance of religious worship? (2) Was such assembly, in fact, disturbed by the accused? (3) Was such disturbance caused by acts and conduct on the part of the accused by which he intended to cause such disturbance, or which acts and conduct, at the time of such acts and conduct, he knew or believed to be likely to cause such disturbance? Held by MAHMOOD, J., that the discussion occasioned by the act of the accused having presumably taken place during the interval when the prayers were not going on, the assembly was not at that time "engaged in the performance of religious worship" and was not "disturbed" within the meaning of s. 296 of the Penal Code; that in reference to the terms of s. 39 of the Code, the accused did not disturb the assembly "voluntarily," that he was justified by the Mahomedan ecclesiastical law in entering the mosque, and joining the congregation in saying the word "Amin" loudly if he thought fit, and his conduct fell within the purview of s. 29 of the Penal Code, and was therefore not an offence under s. 296. Beatty v. Gillbanks, L. R., 9 Q. B. D., 803, referred to. Also per MAHMOOD, J., that having regard to the guarantee given by the Legislature in s. 24 of Act VI of 1871 (Bengal Civil Courts Act) that the Mahomedan law shall be administered in all questions regarding "any religious usage or institution" the Court was bound by s. 57 of Act I of 1872 (Evidence Act) to take judicial notice of the Mahomedan ecclesiastical law, and the rules of that

2. ———— Defiling a place of worship—Penal Code, ss. 295, 297—Trespass on a place of sepulture.—R, a Hindu, had sexual intercourse with a woman within an enclosure surrounding the tomb of a Mahomedan fakir. He was convicted under s. 295 of the Penal Code. 4. ———— Killing bulls set at large at sraddha in accordance with Hindu religious usage.—The word "object" in s. 295 of the Penal Code does not include animate objects. A bull dedicated and set at large at the sraddha of a Hindu in accordance with religious usage is not an "object" within the meaning of that section. Where such an animal was killed by certain Mahomedans secretly and at night in the presence of none but Mahomedans for the sake of the meat and value of the skin,—Held that no offence had been committed under s. 295. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 5. ———— Disturbing a religious assembly—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 296.—The worship referred to in s. 296 of the Penal Code must be real worship and not a cloak for doing something else, and the assembly must be lawfully engaged in worship. If the ceremony is commenced by an act which is not lawful, it cannot be said that the persons engaged in it are lawfully engaged from the mere circumstance of their falling into a posture of worship, though such worship may be real. As to whether a worship is real or not, much must depend upon the circumstances under which it is performed. Per BANERJEE, J.—To constitute an offence under s. 296 of the Penal Code, (1) there must be a voluntary disturbance caused; (2) the disturbance must be caused to an assembly engaged in religious worship or religious ceremonies; and (3) the assembly must be lawfully engaged in such worship or ceremonies, i.e., they must be doing what they have a right to do. JAIPAL GIR v. RELIGIOUS COMMUNITY.

1. ———— Suit relating to trust among a community—Jurisdiction of High Court in charitable trusts—Khoja Mahomedans—Regulation of rights of dissident parties in a religious community.—In a suit by certain members of the Khoja community in Bombay for an account of all property belonging to, or held in trust for, the community, come to the hands of the treasurer and accountant of the community; for a declaration that the treasurer and accountant had ceased to be such officers of the community; for an order directing the treasurer and accountant to deliver all the property of the community in their hands; for a declaration that the property of the community was held and ought to be applied to and for the original charitable, religious, and public uses or trusts to or for which they were dedicated and to none other, for the sole benefit of the Khoja sect and none other; and that no person, not being or having ceased to be a member of the same, and in particular no person professing Shia opinions in matters of religion, was entitled to any share or interest therein; for a scheme to carry such declaration into effect, and for an injunction restraining one of the defendants from interfering in the management of the property and affairs of the Khoja community or in the election and appointment of officers, from excommunicating any members of the community, from celebrating marriages, and from demanding or receiving any offering.—Held that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. When the Court, in exercise of its charitable jurisdiction, is called upon to adjudicate between conflicting claims of dissident parties in a community distinguished by some religious profession, the rights of the litigants will be regulated by reference to the religious tenets held by the community in its origin, and a minority holding those tenets will prevail against a majority which has receded from them. History given of the sects of Sunis, Shias, and Shia Imami Ismailis; of Aga Khan; and of the Khojas and their relations with the hereditary Imam of the Ismailis. Relations of Aga Khan with the Jamat of the Khojas of Bombay discussed. The tenets of Mahomedanism to which the first Khojas were converted were those of the Shia Imami Ismaili sect. In order to enjoy the full privileges of membership in the Khoja community, a person must be one of that sect whose ancestors were originally Hindus, which was converted to, and has throughout abided in the faith of, the Shia Imami Ismailis, and which has always been and still is bound by ties of spiritual allegiance to the hereditary Imams of the Ismailis. There is no public property impressed with a trust, either express or implied, for the benefit of the whole Khoja community. Aga Khan, as the spiritual head of the Khojas, is entitled to exercise a potential voice in determining who, on religious grounds, shall or shall not remain members of the Khoja community. ADVOCATE GENERAL,

[12 Bom., 323]

2. — Jews — Beni-Israelite community in Bombay—Dismissal of officers of the community by resolutions passed at a meeting—Such officers to be given opportunity of defending themselves—Domestic tribunal—Jurisdiction of Court.—The plaintiffs and the defendants were members of the Beni-Israelite community worshipping at a certain synagogue in Bombay. The administration of the synagogue and of the funds was vested in a mukadam or headman and four managers, a treasurer, and a crier. The mukadam succeeded to the office by family right according to the custom of the community, but in matters of management he was bound to keep within his powers, which were co-ordinate with those of his colleagues. The first defendant was the mukadam, the second defendant was the hazan or beadle, and the third defendant was the samost or crier. The first defendant had succeeded to the office of mukadam as the nearest lineal descendant of the founder of the synagogue. The second defendant was appointed by the community, and it did not appear on what terms he held office. The third defendant was merely a paid official of a subordinate character. Disputes arose in the community, which became divided into two parties, to one of which the three defendants belonged. At a meeting of the community held on the 28th October 1884, which was attended by a majority of the community, resolutions were passed, dismissing all three defendants from office; and their dismissal was formally communicated to them by a letter, dated the 30th October. It did not appear that they had been given any notice that the question of their dismissal was to be discussed at the meeting. They had received only the ordinary notice that a meeting was to be held. The defendants refused to recognize the authority of the resolutions passed at the meeting of the 28th October, and the plaintiffs accordingly filed this suit, praying for a declaration that the defendants did not occupy any official position in the synagogue and for the recovery of certain property in their hands. Held that the first defendant had not been duly dismissed. He held the office of mukadam not merely at the will of the community, but as long as he duly performed the duties of his office. He could not be dismissed without an opportunity of making his defence and explaining his conduct, and he had been given no notice that his conduct and his dismissal were to be discussed at the meeting of the 28th October. Held also that the second defendant had not been duly dismissed. No evidence was given as to the exact terms on which he held office; but he was entitled to notice, and to an opportunity of defending himself before dismissal. Held, as to the third defendant, that he had been duly dismissed. He was merely a subordinate officer, and the managers had the power of dismissing him. All the managers, save the first and second defendants, concurred in dismissing him, and in doing so they were within their right. Where a domestic tribunal has been appointed for the regulation of the affairs of a community, the Court has no jurisdiction to interfere

1. ———— Lease for specific term—Act X of 1859, s. 19—Tenant.—S. 19, Act X of 1859, did not apply to a raiyat who had taken a lease for a specific term. KASHEE SINGH v. OMRAUT
[5 W. R., Act X, 81]

2. ———— Contract for definite specified interest in land—Notice of relinquishment—Act X of 1859, s. 19.—Held that the provisions of s. 19, Act X of 1859, were not applicable to a lessee who had contracted for a definite specified interest in the land, and that the contract or lease must regulate the whole relationship between the lessor and lessee, not only in regard to the time of commencement and continuance, but also in regard to the termination of the holding. DWARKA DOSS v. GOKUL DOSS . . . 1 Agra, Rev., 22

3. ———— Contract by lessee not to relinquish—Act X of 1859, s. 19.—A perpetual contract by a lessee for his heirs, reciting that they shall never relinquish the jote, could not operate against s. 19, Act X of 1859, which enacted that any raiyat might relinquish his jote if he did so in a legal manner. GOPAL PAL CHOWDERY v. TARINER PRESHAD GHOSH . . . 9 W. R., 89

4. ———— Proof of relinquishment—Ours of proof.—Where a tenant is found to have taken steps required by law in furtherance of his intended relinquishment, it is for the landlord to prove his continued possession notwithstanding. But where it is found that the tenant has not gone through the necessary steps, it will be for him to prove that the landlord took possession of the land and enjoyed the profits by holding it khas, or by letting it to others. BESKINE v. RAM COOMAR ROY . . . 8 W. R., 220

5. ———— Waiver of right to tenure—Failure to take up māl land after survey and assessment—Forfeiture of claim.—A person who fails at the survey to take up māl land, which he held without assessment before the survey, and allows it to be taken up by another cultivator who pays the assessment upon it, must be held to have forfeited his claim to such land. HALAKRISHNA GOVIND GADGIL v. 6. ———— Relinquishment by mirasidar—Effect of delivery of possession without reservation—Title, Extinction of.—B, a mirasidar, addressed a razinama to the mamlatdar, resigning certain miras land in favour of L (to whom at the same time he delivered possession of the lands), and containing no reservation or qualification. Held that the transfer to L was complete, and the rights of B wholly extinguished. TARACHAND PICHAND v. LAKSHMAN BHABANI . . . I. L. R., 1 Bom., 91

7. ———— Right of ejectment—Razinama.—A mirasidar who has given in a razinama is entitled to eject the tenant put in possession of his miras lands by the Collector, provided he sue within the period of limitation, and the razinama contain no stipulation whereby he expressly abandons his miras rights. JOTI BHIMRAO v. BALU BIN BAPUJI . . . I. L. R., 1 Bom., 208

8. ———— Relinquishment after mortgage, Effect of—Right of transferee—Mortgagee's right—Sale for arrears of revenue.—D, widow of a Hindu mirasidar, by a duly-registered deed, dated the 24th of November 1869, mortgaged the miras land of her deceased husband to R M for Rs150. Subsequently, on the 5th July 1872, D executed a razinama of the land in favour of E G. Held that the mortgage bound D's estate in the miras land as a Hindu widow; that whether the property was regarded as miras or as that of an ordinary occupant, it was transferable under s. 36 of Bombay Act I of 1865; that when D executed the razinama, there was nothing left in her to relinquish or otherwise deal with more than the equity of redemption; that consequently E G took nothing by the razinama executed in his favour by D except this equity of redemption. Tarachand v. Lakshman, I. L. R., 1 Bom., 91, distinguished. The distinction between the present case and the case of a purchase at a sale for arrears of Government land revenue is, that at such last-mentioned sale the purchaser takes the land discharged of all encumbrances, inasmuch as the Government land revenue is the paramount charge upon the land. RAMACHANDRA MANKSHWAR v. BHIMRAO RAOJI . . . I. L. R., 1 Bom., 577

9. ———— Notice of relinquishment—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 20.—S. 20, Bengal Act VIII of 1869, does not apply when the raiyat holds under a lease for a limited period which has expired. In such a case no written notice of relinquishment is necessary. TILAK PATAK v. MAHABIR PANDAY

raiyat thereupon intimated to the landlord's agent his intention to relinquish the land.—Held that there was a sufficient compliance with s. 19, Act X of 1859.

KENNY v. ISSUR CHUNDER PODDAR

[W. R., 1864, Act X, 9

12. ———— Act X of 1859, s. 19.—S. 19, Act X of 1859, did not imperatively require an application for service of notice of relinquishment of land by a raiyat to be made to the Collector. The non-service of notice by the Collector cannot affect the rights of the tenant, if he can prove that, previous to his application to the Collector, he had given actual notice direct to the landlord himself or to his authorized agent. The application to the Collector is not bad because it was not made in the month of Chyot preceding. ERSKINE v. RAM COOMAR ROY 8 W. R., 220

RELINQUISHMENT OF, OR OMIS- SION TO SUE FOR, PORTION OF CLAIM.

1. ———— Splitting cause of action—Accidental or involuntary omission—Mistake—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 7.—The words "if a plaintiff relinquish or omit to sue for any portion of his claim, a suit for the portion so relinquished or omitted shall not afterwards be entertained," in s. 7, Act VIII of 1859, plainly include accidental or involuntary omission, as well as acts of deliberate relinquishment. The correct test when a second suit is brought for something omitted to be sued for in a previous suit is whether the claim in the new suit is in fact founded on a cause of action distinct from that which was the foundation of the former suit. Where a suit was brought for a large amount of property, consisting partly of Government paper which, it was alleged, had been fraudulently appropriated by the defendant and the plaintiff obtained a decree,—Held (reversing the decision of the High Court) that the plaintiff was precluded by s. 7 of Act VIII of 1859 from afterwards bringing a fresh suit on a piece of Government paper which might have been, but by mistake was not, included in the previous suit. *BUZLOOR RUBEEM v. 2. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 7—Statement of intention not to relinquish.—The words of s. 7 of the Civil Procedure Code were imperative against the splitting of a claim into parts. The consequences of an infringement of that direction were not that the suit which does not include the whole claim shall for this reason be barred. The words "in bar of suit" referred to any subsequent suit brought for the portion of the claim omitted in the previous suit, and not to such previous suit itself. A plaintiff who omits to sue for a portion of his claim stating that he does not relinquish it, but means to sue again for it, can gain nothing by such a statement. Neither can such a statement furnish a reason for holding the first suit to be barred. SOONDER BEBER v. KHILLOO MULL alias RAM LALL 2 N. W., 80

3. ———— Suit for arrears of rent for successive years—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 7.—S. 7, Act VIII of 1859, did not require a plaintiff having several distinct causes of action against one defendant to comprise them all in one suit subject to the hazard of forfeiting all those not included in the first suit. The object of the clause was only to provide against splitting a cause of action. SUTTO CHURN GHOSAL v. OBHOY NUND DOSS 2 W. R., Act X, 31

DYARAM v. GOURER SHUNKER 3 N. W., 20

4. ———— Negligent omission of part of claim—Obligation as to enforcing all available remedies.—The 7th section of the Civil Procedure Code, 1859, prohibits the splitting of a claim, but does not require that all remedies by suit on all the securities which a creditor may hold be enforced together. If a plaintiff, from negligence or other cause, omits to prefer a portion of his claim which seeks to charge the land, or, having preferred it, is content to accept an imperfect adjudication, or one which awards him only a portion of the relief claimed, he cannot afterwards bring forward in a fresh suit matter which might well have been then disposed of. MULUK FUQUERE BUKSH v. LALLER MANOHUR DOSS 2 N. W., 29

5. ———— Fresh suit in respect of same subject-matter—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 7.—A party is bound to bring forward his whole case in respect of the matter in litigation and open to him upon the points for decision in the suit. He cannot abstain from relying upon nor abandon a ground of claim which is in question and proper for consideration and decision in the suit and afterwards make it a cause of fresh suit in respect of the same subject-matter. UDAIYA TEVAR v. KATAMA NAONI YAR 2 Mad., 181

6. ———— Omission to include all grounds on which suit is based—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 7.—A plaintiff is bound to include in his plaint all the grounds upon which his suit is based. A second suit upon a different ground which existed before the commencement of the first suit would not be allowed, as it would be splitting the cause of action. ABHIRAM DOSS v. SHIRAM DOSS

cause of action were not sued for together, the portion abandoned could not be separately sued for afterwards; but it did not enact a similar penalty for all rights under the same or similar titles, the right to sue for which may require different issues to be tried and may arise under different dates and different causes of action, and the defendants as to which different properties may be either one party or different parties altogether. *MOTHOOR MOHUN MUNDUL v. 8. ———— Omission to put forward case in full—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 7.—A plaintiff suing for the recovery of land is bound to put forward his whole case at once, and cannot be allowed to maintain a second suit for the same cause of action, merely by alleging that the Collector's order sought to be set aside is of a different date and description from that which was sought to be set aside in the former suit. LUCHMUN DOSS v. PRIAG DUTT 2 Agra, 805

9. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 7.—Title resting on different and distinct transactions.—The fact that a defendant's title rests upon different and distinct transactions, supported by distinct and separate evidence, does not necessarily imply that to a party contesting their title, there are different causes of action warranting separate suits. RAM SOONDUR SHAHA v. DELANNEY 20 W. R., 103

10. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 7.—Distinct causes of action.—S. 7 of Act VIII of 1859 applied, whether the omission to sue had been the result of knowledge and intention or not. The test as to whether a suit was barred by s. 7 of Act VIII of 1859 was whether the claim in the new suit was in fact founded on a cause of action distinct from that which was the foundation of the former suit. *BULWUNT SINGH v. the whole talukh. Per AINSLIE, J.—But if one of the joint tenants in a former suit claimed a 2-anna instead of a 4-anna share, she cannot now be allowed to supplement her claim or take interests in the patni which she could not have enforced independently of the sale. *RAM CHURN BUNDOPADHYA v. 15. ———— Civil Procedure Code, ss. 43, 58, 278, 280, and 283.—Intervenor claiming attached property by two separate titles—Single order raising attachment—Two suits by judgment-creditors for declaration of their right to attach—Order of filing of suits.—A plaintiff's cause of action consists of every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove, if traversed, in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court. It does not comprise every piece of evidence which is necessary to prove such fact, but every fact which is necessary to be proved. Read v. Brown, L. R., 22 Q. B. D., 128, referred to. The plaintiffs, holding a simple money decree against two persons, B R and M R, attached in execution thereof (a) their judgment-debtors' mortgage interest in a certain mortgage; and (b) a house said to belong to their judgment-debtors. Against this attachment one M filed objections under s. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in consequence of which the property was released from attachment. The plaintiffs thereupon brought two suits under s. 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure, one in respect of the mortgage interest and the other in respect of the house. Held by the Full Bench (AIKMAN, J. dissentiente) that the first essential of the plaintiffs' cause of action was the order made under s. 283 of the Code of Civil

Procedure, and that, until that order was made, they had no cause of action. The cause of action was the order under s. 280, which had been obtained by M, and the right and title of the plaintiffs' to bring the subjects of attachment to sale in execution of their decree. The title or titles which the defendant might prove formed no part of the plaintiffs' cause of action, nor would the defendant's allegation of different titles in herself to different portions of the property split up the plaintiffs' cause of action into different and distinct causes of action. Similarly the fact that the plaintiffs' judgment-debtors held or were alleged to hold portions of the property under different titles would not split up the plaintiffs' cause of action into different causes of action. S. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure has nothing to do with the evidence which may be necessary or may be produced to support or defend a cause of action or with the desire of a plaintiff to bring more suit than one, or with the devolution of title where the cause of action relates to land or other kind of property. In the above case consequently s. 43 of the Code barred the later of the plaintiffs' two suits. Held also that, where two suits are filed on the same day, it must be presumed, until the contrary is proved, that they were presented and admitted in the order in which their numbers appear in the register of civil suits prescribed by s. 58 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Kaleshar Prasad v. Jagan Nath, I. L. R., 1 All., 650; Appasami v. Ramasami, I. L. R., 9 Mad., 279; and Duncanson Brothers & Co. v. Jeetmull Greedhars Lall, I. L. R., 19 Cal., 372, referred to. Zahur Husain v. Muhammad Hasan, Weekly Notes, All. (1888), 127, and Muhammad Ibrahim Khan v. Habib-ullah Khan, Weekly Notes, All. (1896), 113, overruled. Per AIKMAN, J.—Although it was the single order in the execution department which necessitated the plaintiffs' bringing their suits, the plaintiffs' real causes of action were the separate transactions entered into by the judgment-debtors with the objector under s. 278 of the Code, and they were therefore entitled to bring separate suits. MURTI v. BHOLA RAM

16. ———— Simultaneous suits for balance of account after settlement—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 43.—Upon a settlement of accounts between plaintiff and defendants, Rs. 985-6-9 was found due by the defendants, who agreed to pay the same. They gave to plaintiff an order on their agents to pay Rs. 500 from the profits of certain land, and promised to pay the balance within a month. Plaintiff filed two suits, one for Rs. 500 and the other for the balance of the debt. Defendants pleaded that both suits should be dismissed, as brought in contravention of the requirements of s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The lower Courts held that there were two distinct causes of action, and decreed both claims. Held, on second appeal, that plaintiff had only one cause of action, and that the decree in one of the suits must be reversed. *APPASAMI v. 17. ———— Suit for receipt as security for advance—Suit for balance of account.—A sued B for recovery of a receipt which had been deposited by the former with the latter as security for a certain advance of money. Held that he was not thereby debarred, under s. 7, Act VIII of 1859, from bringing a suit for the balance due on the whole account between them. *MEDHI ULLER KHAN v. 18. ———— Suit for sum due in account book—Addition of claim for same sum due on hath-chitta—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 7—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 34.—Where a plaintiff originally sued for a certain sum upon his khatta books, and an objection was taken by the defendant that he ought to have sued upon a certain hath-chitta, whereupon the plaintiff amended his plaint by suing for the amount admittedly due upon the hath-chitta, in addition to the amount he claimed upon his khatta books,—Held that, when the plaintiff amended his plaint by suing upon the hath-chitta his causes of action, which, when the suit was originally framed, were distinct, became united; that there was no "relinquishment" in the original suit within the terms of Act VIII of 1859, s. 7 (with which s. 43, Act X of 1877, corresponds), and that the plaint was rightly amended. *RAM TAMBUN KOONDU v. 19. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 43—Suit to cancel release, obtained by duress, of all claims against defendants, and to recover amount of one such claim so far as subsequent suits upon other causes of action so released.—On the 1st July 1878 there was a settlement of accounts between the plaintiff and defendants, and a debt was acknowledged due by the latter to the former, and on the same day the plaintiff and defendants entered into a trading partnership which was carried on till August. On the 30th September the defendants extorted a release from the plaintiff whereby the plaintiff's claims against them arising out of the two transactions mentioned and all other transactions between them were released. On the 23rd November the plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants, and, in the plaint, after stating the fact of the settlement of 1st July 1878, the balance found due therein to the plaintiff, the extortion of the release, and the misappropriation of the sums due to the plaintiff by the defendants as the cause of action, prayed for cancellation of the release and for recovery of the amount due to the plaintiff by the defendants under the settlement of 1st July 1878. Held, in a suit to wind up the partnership of July and August 1878, that the plaintiff was not bound by s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have included in his former suit his claim arising out of that partnership and that the former suit being in substance a suit upon the account stated on 1st July 1878, and not

20. Accretion to land—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 9.—The plaintiff sued for a certain specified quantity of land as being between specified boundaries. On measurement, however, it was found there was more land within those boundaries than the plaintiff claimed. He obtained only a decree for what he claimed, though he had claimed all the land up to the boundary (the river) on one side: the excess was deducted on that side. Held, reversing the decision of the High Court, that a subsequent suit in which he claimed land which had accreted to the excess portion which was not decreed to him in the former suit was not barred by s. 7, Act VIII of 1859. *RAJAWAN SINGH v. 21. Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 43—Breaches of one term in a contract, how sued upon—Cause of action—Contract.—Per GARTHE, C.J.—A claim for the price of goods sold is a cause of action of a different nature from a claim for damages for non-acceptance of goods pursuant to a contract. Such claims, therefore, although arising under one and the same contract, may be sued upon separately, s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure notwithstanding. Per WILSON, J.—Where there is one contract for the purchase of goods and the purchaser takes some of the goods, but breaks his contract in part by not paying for the goods he takes, and in part by not taking and paying for the remainder, and both breaches occur before any suit is brought, the claim of the person suing is one arising out of one cause of action; and the whole claim must be included in one suit. ANDERSON, WRIGHT & Co. v. KALAGARLA SURJINARAIN

[I. L. R., 12 Calc., 339]

22. Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 43—Breaches of the same contract how sued upon—Contract.—Where a contract for the sale and purchase of goods is broken by the purchaser, in part by refusal to take delivery and in part by refusal to pay for goods delivered, both breaches having occurred before any suit is brought, the vendor is debarred by s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure from bringing two suits against such purchaser, his claim being one arising out of one cause of action and based on one and the same contract. The view taken by WILSON, J., in Anderson, Wright & Co. v. Kalagarla Surjinarain, I. L. R., 12 Calc., 339, approved. PETHERAM, C.J.—"The whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action" in s. 43 means, in the above case, the entire claim which the plaintiff has against the defendant at the time the action is brought in respect of any failure or failures to accept and pay for goods purchased of him by the defendant under one contract, and the whole of such claim must be included in one action. PRINSEP, J.—The expression "cause of action" is to be construed with reference to the substance rather than the form of the action. The claim in both the above cases being for damages on account of breaches of the same contract, s. 43 read with the illustration debars the plaintiff from bringing two suits. *DUNCAN BROTHERS & Co. v. 23. Suit for demurrage—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 7.—In a suit for demurrage, the cause of action being the detention of a boat, plaintiff is bound to sue for the whole of the demurrage due; failing to claim a portion, he is barred by s. 7, Act VIII of 1859, from suing subsequently for such portion. MUNGHROO MAHJHER v. GYARAM NUNDER . . . 14 W. R., 253

24. Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 43—Suit for damages for wrongful dismissal.—A suit having been brought in a Small Cause Court for damages laid at Rs 400 for wrongful dismissal, a decree was given for Rs 75 per mensem, the amount of wages which had been agreed on, up to the filing of the plaint, the Judge intimating that for damages accruing after the filing of the plaint further suits month by month might be brought. Two suits were accordingly brought for the two months next succeeding the date of the first suit, and decrees were obtained. The High Court, upon an application made by the defendant, set aside these decrees on the ground that after the first suit no further suits could be. SIMPSON v. CLEIGHORN

26. Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 43—Two successive suits for damages for tort—Trespass on land—Conversion of moveables lying on land—Grounds of attack.—Defendants having forcibly taken possession of plaintiff's land upon which was (1) standing timber, and (2) logs of timber lying stored on the ground, plaintiff had, in a prior suit, recovered possession and damages. Subsequently to the institution of such prior suit, defendants (1) cut and removed certain standing trees, and (2) removed the logs which lay stored on the ground. Upon plaintiff bringing a second suit to recover damages on both grounds, objection was raised, (1) as to the standing timber, that plaintiff's remedy was under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, and (2)

as to the logs, that a claim for their value might have been included in the former suit, since their conversion was effected when the plaintiff was dispossessed of the land upon which they lay, and that, under s. 43, no claim could now be made in respect of them. Held (1) that the proceeds obtained from cutting and removing saleable timber on the land were in the nature of mere profit, and these having been taken since the institution of the previous suit, plaintiff could recover; (2) that a trespass on a piece of land is by itself no proof of any conversion of moveables lying upon the land at the time that the trespass takes place; that, notwithstanding plaintiff's eviction from the land, possession of the timber lying stored upon it should be presumed to have continued in him in the absence of proof of any act on the part of the defendant with special reference to such timber and showing unequivocally that the plaintiff was entirely deprived of the use of them; and that conversion of the logs was not effected by the trespass, but only by their removal subsequently to the institution of the previous suit; and (3) that the causes of action now relied on were therefore different from those relied on before, and the previous suit did not operate as a bar to the present claim under s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. *MOYI v. (1875-76). In this suit he obtained a decree. On the 21st Joist 1287 F.S. (1876-77 to 1878-79). Held that the plaintiff should have included the damages for the years 1284 and 1285 (1876-77 and 1877-78) in his former suit, and that he was debarred by s. 43 of Act X of 1877 from including in his second suit any portion of his claim for damages which had accrued due at the time of the institution of his first suit, and for which he had omitted to sue; but that he was entitled to recover damages for the year 1286 (1878-79). *Taruck Chunder Mookerjee v. This suit was dismissed on the ground that no dispossession had taken place, the plaintiff being referred to a Small Cause Court for his damages. No appeal was made against this decision. In March 1887 the plaintiff sued these defendants in the Munsif's Court for possession of 5 bighas 6 cottahs of land and for mere profits, and obtained a decree for possession of 3 bighas 6 cottahs of land with mere profits; possession of the 1 bigha, the subject of the suit of 1886, being included in the 3 bighas 6 cottahs decreed. In the meantime, A had committed default, and the patni was again sold for arrears of rent. The zamindar drew out from the Collectorate the amount due to him. C, who had bought B's right, title, and interest in his decree, now sued A for recovery of the surplus proceeds of sale in the hands of the Collector, and obtained a decree. He afterwards sued A for mere profits for the time during which he was in possession of the patni talukh. This was a suit by C against A for recovery of the amount drawn out by the zamindar, on the ground that, in consequence of A having collected the rents from the talukh, which were to go towards payment of the rent due to the land on its banks, recovered possession by a suit under Act XIV of 1859, s. 15. The defendants then instituted a civil suit for determination of title, in which the plaintiffs were successful. The plaintiffs on the 22nd Cheyt 1277 (3rd April 1871) instituted a suit for the recovery of the value of fish taken by the defendants on the 27th Bysack 1276 (8th May 1869), the day of dispossession; but the suit was compromised. The plaintiffs now claimed mesne profits with reference to fish and grass appropriated by the defendants from 1st Bysack 1277 to 7th Bhadro 1278 (12th April 1870 to 22nd August 1871). Held that the present claim for the period preceding 22nd Cheyt 1277 (the date of the former suit, was barred by Act VIII of 1859, s. 7; that the previous suit as well as the present were really suits for damages; and that the previous suit and compromise ought to have included all claims of the plaintiffs arising out of the dispossession. SARM SIRDAR v. S sold the half share held by her to M; some portion of the mouzah being in the possession of the other defendants, S and D sued them to recover it and also for mesne profits, and obtained a decree. The defendants appealed, whereupon S filed a solehnamah. The decree was upheld, however, by the lower Appellate Court. In special appeal the Sudder Court refused to give the renouncing plaintiff any decree for mesne profits of a share. The plaintiff, who had then come of age, was not represented in the litigation in the Court. Shortly afterwards he sued S and M to set aside the sale to M, and obtained a decree. On D's death, M obtained possession of the land which had been the subject of the suit by S and D. The mortgagor refused to deliver possession of the property, and the mortgagee sued him to enforce specific performance of the contract to deliver possession, and obtained a decree. At the time this suit was brought, the mortgagee had been kept out of possession of the property for two years, during which time the mortgagor had taken the mesne profits. The mortgagee subsequently sued the mortgagor to recover the mesne profits of the mortgaged property for those two years. Held that, as the mortgagee might in the former suit, in addition to seeking the specific performance of the mortgage contract, have asked for such mesne profits by way of compensation for the breach of it; and as the claim for possession and mesne profits were in respect of the same cause of action,—i.e., the breach of the contract to give possession,—the second suit was barred by the provisions of s. 43 of Act X of 1877. LALJI MAL v. In 1869 B died, and K's name was recorded in the revenue registers in the place of B's name in respect of the estate. In 1870 K died and her daughter S applied to have her name recorded in the revenue registers in respect of the estate. M, the illegitimate son of B, objected, claiming to have his name recorded. He obtained a decree declaring his title to the share claimed. L, one of the sons of M, had fraudulently concealed from and kept S in ignorance of the fact that previously to the suit he had realized Rs. 624 under the mortgage. On this fact coming to S's knowledge, he sued the sons of M to recover his share of that sum. Held that the second suit was not barred by s. 7 of Act VIII of 1859. *Bulwant Singh v. Accordingly, where a plaintiff had sued to obtain his share of an estate in land, in consequence of having been wrongfully dispossessed by the defendant, whom he afterwards in the present suit sued for his share of personal prop. rty, being entitled to both under a will, it was held that the subsequent suit was not barred by reason of the non-claim in the prior one. In 1870 P sued the said K and one E for some trees which he also claimed by right of inheritance from his grandfather. Held that the causes of action in the two suits by P were different, viz., unlawful alienations by K of the respective properties, the subject-matter of the different suits. S. 7, Civil Procedure Code, requires that every suit should include the whole of the claim arising from the same cause of action; but although the Civil Procedure Code allows of claims arising from different causes of action being included in the same plaint, there is no provision of law which makes it obligatory on the plaintiff to do so. *PRAGJI RUDARJI v. Subsequently he sued the same defendant for possession of the other, alleging that, at the time when he instituted the former suit, he had already been dispossessed of the house now in question, and by the same person. Held that, although the plaintiff's title to both houses rested on the title acquired by him under one and the same sale-deed, yet the cause of action—viz., his ouster from the two houses

60. — Civil Procedure Code (1859), s. 43—Relinquishment by guardian of minor of part of claim—Subsequent suit for part relinquished.—While plaintiff was a minor, his guardian had sued for and obtained a decree for arrears of shrotriem in respect of Faslis 1290 and 1291. Having attained his majority, plaintiff now sued for similar arrears alleged to be due in respect of the previous Faslis 1287, 1288, and 1289, contending that the relinquishment of a portion of a claim in a suit by a guardian could not preclude a suit for the portion relinquished from being subsequently brought, on the attainment of his majority, by the person on whose behalf the guardian had acted. Held that it cannot be said that s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application to a suit in which the plaintiff is a minor. The acts of a guardian in the conduct of a suit must be upheld unless it be shown that they were unreasonable or improper. GOPAL RAO v. NARASINGA RAO I. L. R., 22 Mad., 309

The present claim, which was for a share in the rents of certain inam lands, also joint family property, was not included in the suit of 1860. At the date of the former suit the land in respect to which the present suit was brought was subject to the provisions of Regulation IV of 1831, and the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to try the suit in respect to such land without the permission of the Government. A suit was brought by the heirs of the deceased, first to set aside the second alienation, and then a second suit to cancel the first alienation. Held that s. 7, Act VIII of 1859, did not bar the second suit. The heir's cause of action against different alienees, who have acquired possession under alienations made at different times and under different circumstances, was not one and the same, the question of right of succession to the deceased and widow's competency to alienate arising equally in both the cases notwithstanding. It was not obligatory on the heirs to make all the alienees parties to the first suit upon pain of forfeiting all future right of suit against them by reason of such omission. *JEHAN BEBER v. 67. — Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 43—Act VIII of 1859, s. 7—Suit for partition of portion of property.—If a person intentionally omit to sue for any portion of his claim, the provisions of s. 43 of Act X of 1877, as well as the provisions of s. 7 of Act VIII of 1859, bar the institution of a second suit for the portion so omitted, so that, where a family property consisted of lands as well as debts, and the plaintiff at first sued for a partition of debts only, and then compromised and withdrew the suit without the permission of the Court, it was held that his second suit to demand a partition of the whole property was not maintainable. UKHA v. DAGA I. L. R., 7 Bom., 182

68. — Different cause of action—Suit for share of undivided property—Subsequent suit for partition of whole of the property.—In applying the provisions of s. 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1859, the first thing to be considered is whether the cause of action in the second suit is the same as the cause of action in the first. If the cause of action be the same, the second suit is barred in respect of any portion of the claim omitted from the first suit, but not otherwise. Accordingly where the plaintiff, as a member of an undivided Hindu family, sued for a share of a particular portion of the family property leaving the rest undivided, and his suit was rejected, as it had not been brought for his whole share, it was held that the suit was no bar to a second suit to have the whole property divided, as the causes of action in the two suits were entirely distinct. KAKAI BIN RANOJI v. 69. — Suit for partition between co-owners—Former suits for partition of parts of property—Different causes of action.—The plaintiff was the Zamorin of Calicut, and he sued in 1887 for a moiety of certain property in Malabar alleged to belong in equal undivided shares to his stanom and that of the defendant and to be in the occupation of tenants. The cause of action was stated to have arisen in 1881 when partition was demanded by the Zamorin and refused by the defendant. In some instances the tenants in occupation represented the family, a member of which was at one time admitted by the Zamorin under a demise or kanom, and had attorned to the defendant; in other instances they were shown to have been admitted by the defendant on paying off the former tenant who had been admitted by the Zamorin. It appeared that the Zamorin had previously brought suits and obtained decrees for partition of certain parcels of land as belonging equally to the two stanoms, the defendant in each suit being the present defendant and the tenant in occupation of the land then in question.

ATMARAM JANARDAN I. L. R., 23 Bom., 597

71. — Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 7—Suit for partition omitting mortgaged lands—Subsequent suit for share of mortgaged lands.—The plaintiffs in 1863 sued the defendants for the plaintiff's share in certain undivided family property, and did not include in their claim certain lands then in the possession of mortgagees which lands had been mortgaged by one of the defendants as manager of the family. The defendants subsequently redeemed the mortgaged lands. The plaintiffs then filed a suit to recover their share of the lands so redeemed. Held that they were entitled to maintain such suit, as the mortgaged lands had not been available for an actual partition at the time of the former suit. BALKRISHNA VITHAL v. HARI SHANKAR 8 Bom., A. C., 64

72. — Omission of mortgaged field in suit for partition—Subsequent suit.—In 1861 the plaintiff brought a general partition suit (No. 1363) to recover his share of the family property in the possession of the first defendant, and did not include in that claim a field then in the possession of a mortgagee. The field was subsequently redeemed by the first defendant, who again mortgaged it to the second defendant. The plaintiff then filed the present suit to recover his share in the field. The first Court allowed the plaintiff's claim, but the District Judge on appeal threw it out, on the ground that it was barred both by s. 7 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1859, and by the "law of limitation." The Judge based the latter finding on certain allegations made by the plaintiff in suit No. 1363, and in another suit brought by him against the first defendant and the then mortgagee of the field, from which allegations the Judge inferred a separation between the plaintiff and the first defendant. Held in special appeal that the claim was not barred by s. 7 of the Civil Procedure Code, because the mortgaged field was not available for an actual partition at the time of the former suit, No. 1363 of 1861. The true question for consideration in cases of this kind is whether the former suit was one in which the plaintiff might have recovered precisely that which he seeks to recover in the second, and where the former suit is one for an actual division of property, the plaintiff is not bound in it to ask for a

Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 48—Suit on mortgage of property in different districts—Former suit on one portion only.—A, B, C, and D were the proprietors of a 2 annas 18 gundas share in mouzah E, and also of a 2 annas 18 gundas share in mouzah F, both in the district of Bhagulpore. On the 19th September 1872 A mortgaged a 1 anna 4 pies share of E to H. On the 20th September 1872 A, B, C, and D mortgaged their shares in E and F, together with property in the district of Tirhoot, to the plaintiff. On the 24th March 1873 A mortgaged his share in E and F to J. On the 13th November 1874 A and B mortgaged their shares in E to K. On the 25th March 1874 J obtained a decree on his mortgage, and the interests of A and B were purchased on the 5th January 1875 by L. On the 17th April 1874 M, to whom the first mortgage had been assigned, obtained a decree and attached the property mortgaged. L objected that he had already purchased the interest, of A, and, on the objection being allowed, M instituted a suit against L for a declaration of priority, and obtained a decree on the 9th August 1876. In execution of this decree, the property first mortgaged was sold on the 4th March 1878, and after satisfying the mortgage a surplus of Rs. 7,664 remained. After the institution of the first suit and before L's purchase, the plaintiff instituted a suit upon his mortgage in the Tirhoot Court without having obtained leave to include that portion of the mortgaged property situate in the Bhagulpore district. On the 17th July 1874 a decree was made in this suit. On the 17th January 1877 K obtained a decree on his mortgage, and the shares of A and B in E were sold, and purchased on the 3rd September 1877 by N. The plaintiff had his decree transferred for execution to the Bhagulpore Court, and he attached the surplus sale-proceeds and a 1 anna 9 gundas share in E. This attachment was withdrawn on the objection of L, who drew out the surplus sale-proceeds. The share purchased by N was also released from attachment. The plaintiff now sued L, N, and the mortgagors for a declaration that his decree of the 17th July 1874 affected the E property, to recover the surplus sale-proceeds from L and, in case the decree should not be valid to the extent mentioned, for a decree declaring his prior lien on the property in E. 91. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 43—Omission to sue for one of several remedies—Mortgage.—A mortgagee had two remedies in respect of the mortgagor's breach to pay the stipulated interest at the time fixed by the contract of mortgage, one being a suit on foreclosure proceedings to convert the mortgage into a sale, and the other a suit to recover his money against his debtor by enforcement of his lien against the mortgaged property. He sued for the first remedy in respect of such breach, omitting the second. His suit was dismissed on the ground that he was not entitled to such remedy until the expiration of the mortgage term. He afterwards sued for the second remedy. Held that, inasmuch as the mortgagee was not at the time of his suing for the first remedy "a person entitled to more than one remedy," not being "entitled" to the first, but only to the second, his omission at that time to sue for the second remedy was not, under s. 43 of Act X of 1877, a bar to his afterwards suing for it. PIARI v. Arrears of rent accruing, the mortgagee sued the mortgagor for the same in the Revenue Court and obtained a decree. At the time the suit was brought such property was in the possession of a third person, who had purchased it at a sale in execution of a money-decree against the obligor of such bond. The obligee did not make the purchaser a defendant to the suit. He obtained a decree in the suit for the sale of such property. Being resisted in bringing it to sale by the purchaser, he sued the purchaser to have it declared that such property was liable to be sold under his decree. Held that such second suit was not barred by the

95. ————— Omission to claim compensation-money—Subsequent suit—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 7.—A, a Hindu widow, granted, without legal necessity, a mokurari lease of certain mouzabs, portion of her husband's estate, to B. During B's possession part of the lands comprised in the granted mouzabs were taken up by Government, and the compensation-money was lodged in the Collectorate. A having afterwards died, the next heirs of A's husband, on the 7th October 1871, sued B to recover possession of the mouzabs, but, not being aware of the facts, did not in that suit claim the compensation-money lying in the Collectorate. While this suit was still pending, B, in March 1872, drew the compensation-money out of the Collectorate. The heirs, after obtaining a decree against B for possession of the mouzabs, on the 18th September 1875, instituted a fresh suit against him to recover the compensation-money wrongfully drawn out by him from the Collectorate. Held that the suit was not barred by s. 7 of Act VIII of 1859. Held further that the claim of the heirs was a proper subject for a regular suit, and could not have been heard and determined in the course of the proceedings in execution of the decree which they had obtained against B for possession of the mouzabs. decree on the 6th of April 1876 for the sale of the lands which he purchased on the 17th August 1876 for Rs. 6,000. K then discovered that part of the land hypothecated, situated within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Court at Kumbakonam, had been acquired by a railway company under the Land Acquisition Act in 1874, and that the compensation Rs. 460 (claimed by M's mother, who sold the land to the company) was lodged in the treasury of Kumbakonam in the name of M's mother. K having applied to the Subordinate Court for an order for payment out of this sum, the Court, by order dated 28th February 1880, directed that the question of title to the money should be decided by suit. K then sued M, as the sole heir of his deceased mother, in the District Munsif's Court of Tiruvadi (where M resided), for a declaration of right to and to recover the said sum of Rs. 460. The suit was filed on the 4th September 1880. On the 16th April 1880 M assigned his interest in the money sued for to V, who was made defendant in the suit on his own application, and pleaded that the land having been acquired by the railway company in 1874, before the suit upon the bond was filed, this suit was barred by s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held that K not having known, at the date of his suit on the bond, of the acquisition of the land by the railway company, the suit was not so barred. On the 7th September 1874 V borrowed Rs. 5,000 from R and mortgaged his rights in items 1 and 2 and land of his own to R N. In 1877 R N bought at a sale in execution of a decree against R the share of R in the said items 1 and 2 subject to the mortgage created by R on 5th September 1874, and to another mortgage created by R dated 11th January 1875. In 1889 R N sued V and the sons of R for arrears of interest due under his mortgage-bond, but their suit was withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit for the principal and interest due on the bond. In 1885 R N sued V and the sons of R to recover principal and interest due under his mortgage-bond. Held that the claim of R N was not barred by s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. VENKATA SHETTI v. 99. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 43—Bond with alternative conditions for repayment of loan—Decree for interest—Second suit for further interest.—A bond provided for the repayment of a loan with interest by a stated time. In default of payment by that time, it was provided that the loan might be added to an existing mortgage for a term of years, and repaid at the end of the term, together with the mortgage-debt. After the expiration of the time fixed for the repayment of the loan, the obligee sued and obtained a decree for the interest which had accrued due at the date of the suit. He now sued for the further interest which had since become due. Held that the second suit was not barred by s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for that the first suit being for interest merely, and not for principal and interest, which were then both due, the plaintiff must be taken to have elected, under the bond, to add the principal sum to the previously existing mortgage-debt, in which case he forfeited nothing by suing merely for arrears of interest as they became due. *SHEI SHAI-LAPA v. He recovered the full amount of the first instalment under the first decree, and a portion of the second instalment in execution of his second decree. 104. ———— Promise to pay balance found due on accounts stated in instalments—Promissory note—Note of agreement in account book.—In 1876 accounts were stated between B and D, and a balance of Rs. 00 was found to be due from D to B. D gave B an instrument whereby he agreed to pay the amount of such balance in four annual instalments of Rs. 200. B at the same time noted in his account-book that such balance was "payable in four instalments of Rs. 200 yearly." In July 1879 B sued D upon such instrument for the balance of the first instalment. The Court trying this suit refused to receive such instrument in evidence, on the ground that it was a promissory note, and as such was improperly stamped. Thereupon B applied for and obtained permission to withdraw from the suit, with liberty to bring a fresh one for the original debt. In October 1879 B again sued D, claiming the balance of the first and second instalments, basing his claim upon the note made by him in his account-book. He obtained a decree in that suit for the amount claimed by him. In 1880 B again sued D, claiming the amount of the third instalment, again basing his claim upon such note. Held by SPARKIE, J., that the suit last mentioned was barred by the provisions of s. 43 of Act X of 1877, inasmuch as B should in the second suit brought by him against D have claimed the balance of the money found due from D to him upon the accounts stated between them, instead of claiming the balance of the instalments due. Held by OLDFIELD, J., that such suit was not so barred, the causes of action therein and in the former suit being different. *BANARSI DAS v. 107. ————— Mortgage for securing payment of rent—Decree of Revenue Court for arrears of rent—Suit for sale of mortgaged property—Civil Procedure Code, s. 43.—In 1874 the plaintiff leased certain immovable property to the defendant, and the latter executed a deed by which he covenanted to pay the annual rent and fulfil other conditions of the lease, and gave security in Rs. 5,000 by mortgage of landed property. In 1874 the plaintiff obtained decrees in the Revenue Court for arrears of rent, and the decrees were partially satisfied and then became barred by limitation. In 1884 the plaintiff brought a suit to recover the balance due by enforcement of the mortgage security against the purchasers of the mortgaged property. Held that the plaintiff had two separate rights of action, one on the contract to pay rent and the other on the mortgage security; that he could only enforce the first by a suit in the Revenue Court for arrears of rent, and the second by suit in the Civil Court; and consequently there could be no bar to the latter suit by reason of the suit instituted in the Revenue Court, with reference to s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. CHUNI LAL v. The suit for the rent of the first year was dismissed under s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on the ground that the claim ought to have been included in the suit for the second year's rent. Held that, as the petitioners had no intention of abandoning either claim, the proper course was to allow them to withdraw both suits and file a fresh suit in a competent Court. *ALAGU v. plaintiff B a part of the family property. On the 28th July 1878 S alone further mortgaged to the plaintiff for a fresh advance a portion of the property already mortgaged. In the meantime, on the 27th January 1882 and on the 6th December 1883, V and N respectively mortgaged with possession to the defendant M portions of the land comprised in the first mortgage of the 24th January 1878. In 1883 the plaintiff filed the present suit upon his first mortgage of the 24th January 1878, claiming to recover Rs16-14-0 from S and V personally. He also prayed that the defendant M, who had been in possession of the property in dispute, should be prevented from obstructing him in selling the property. S and V did not appear. The third defendant M alone appeared and contended (inter alia) that the plaintiff, having sued upon his second mortgage without including the earlier one, was now barred from suing on the latter by ss 13 and 43 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882). He also contended that the plaintiff, having purchased part of the lands comprised in the mortgage now sued upon in execution of the decree obtained by him upon his second mortgage, could not now seek to burden the remaining lands included in the mortgage with the whole of the mortgage-debt, but that a proportionate part of that debt must be satisfied. Held that the plaintiff's suit was not barred by his previous suit on the second mortgage under the provisions of ss. 13 and 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. MORO RAGHUNATH v. BALAJI TRIMBAK . . . 122. Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 43—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 85—Rights inter se of two mortgagees of the same property from the same mortgagor.—Two persons each held a mortgage over the same property from the same mortgagor. The mortgages were both executed on the same day. The mortgagees each instituted a suit for sale on the same day and obtained decrees, in execution of which they had the mortgaged property put up for sale, and each purchased it at the sale under his decree respectively. Neither mortgagee made the other a party to the suit on his mortgage. The representative (S) of one of the mortgagee decree-holders got possession of the mortgaged property and held it as against the other mortgagee decree-holder or his representatives. Thereupon the representatives of the other mortgagee brought their suit for possession of a moiety of the property, or in the alternative for redemption of the other mortgage. Held that such suit was not barred either by the provisions of s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or by reason of those of s. 85 of the

123. Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 13 and 43—Act XII of 1879, s. 6—Act VIII of 1859, s. 7—Inclusion of whole claim in suit.—The present suit was preceded by others in which the plaintiff sought to establish a right in the same part of the talukhdari estate that he now claimed to redeem from mortgage. The first suit in which he with another claimed as under-proprietors was dismissed in 1866 on the ground that they had not shown themselves to have held such right under the talukhdars within the period since 1841. Proceedings not to be regarded as judicial, subsequently taken under circular 4 of 1867, resulted in a finding that the dismissal was right upon the merits, the property having been transferred to the talukhdar by a conditional sale which had become absolute. Another suit was then brought to recover the talukhdari rights, under the terms of circular 106 of 1869, it being alleged that arrears of revenue paid by the talukhdar had been paid on the plaintiff's account. That suit was also dismissed. Held that the present suit to redeem the same property under a mortgage was not barred. The claim to redeem did not arise out of the former cause of action within the meaning of the sections of Act VIII of 1859 relating to the inclusion of the whole claim in a suit. The plaintiff not then being aware of his right when he sued before, it could not be regarded as a "portion of his claim," and he was not precluded, by having omitted it, from bringing it forward. *AMANAT BIBI v. 124. Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 43—First suit to redeem—Second suit to eject—Causes of action not identical.—A filed a suit against B to redeem the land in dispute, alleging that it had been mortgaged to B, and that the mortgage-debt had been more than paid off. He therefore prayed for an account and restoration of the land on payment of the sum that might be found due. The Court found that the alleged mortgage was not proved, and dismissed the suit. Thereupon A filed a suit in ejectment against B. Held that the ejectment suit was not barred under s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). Failure in a redemption-suit does not bar a subsequent suit in ejectment, the causes of action in the two suits being essentially different. *Shridas Vinayak v. The objection was disallowed and the land was sold. She then sued the execution-purchaser to set aside the Court-sale, and obtained a

The mortgagee never obtained possession; and in 1882 he brought a suit against the mortgagor to recover the unpaid interest then due, and obtained a decree, which was satisfied by the sale of property belonging to the judgment-debtor. In 1886 he brought another suit for recovery of the principal, together with the residue of interest up to the date of suit. Held that the cause of action in the suit of 1882 was the mortgagor's non-delivery of possession of the mortgaged property, by reason of which the mortgagee had been unable to realize his interest from the usufruct, that the cause of action accrued to the mortgagee from the moment the instrument came into operation and possession was not delivered, that the cause of action to recover the principal accrued at the same time and was the same cause of action, that the plaintiff was therefore bound in the suit of 1882 to sue for the principal, and that the present suit was consequently barred by s. 48 of the Civil Procedure Code. HIKMTULLA KHAN v. The hypothecation deed was executed in 1875 and registered, and it contained the following terms with regard to interest and the repayment of the debt. "We (the obligors) shall pay interest at 7 per cent. per annum before the 30th October of each year; we shall pay in full the principal amount on the 30th October 1878, after clearing off the interest, and redeem this deed; should we fail to pay the interest regularly according to the instalments, we shall at once pay the principal together with the amount of interest." Default was made in the payment of interest in 1876, and in 1877 the plaintiff sued in a District Munsif's Court for the interest then due, expressly stating in the plaint that he agreed to accept payment of the principal and the subsequent years' interest at the times fixed in the deed, and he obtained a decree as prayed. The plaintiff in 1888 now sued the executors of the above instrument and their heirs and representatives to recover the principal together with interest up to date. Held that this suit was not barred by the Civil Procedure Code, s. 43, although the creditor's election not to seek a decree for the full amount in the suit of 1877 had not been communicated to the debtors before that suit. BADI BIOR SANIBAL v. 181. ————— Civil Procedure Code, s. 43.—In 1889 the plaintiff sued the defendant for possession of a piece of land which the defendant had included in her homestead by building walls. In that suit the plaintiff alleged that on that land there were two palm-trees which belonged to him, and that the defendant had wrongfully prevented the pasis from going to those trees to tap them, but he asked in his plaint in that suit for the relief in respect of the trees, only stating that he would bring a separate suit for them. The Munsif dismissed that suit on the ground that the land was within the defendant's tenure, and his decision was affirmed on appeal. 185. ————— Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 43—Suit for money by mortgagees against sons of a deceased judgment-debtor—Former suit on mortgage against father.—A personal decree on a mortgage was passed against a Hindu (the mortgagor) and his two sons on the 19th October 1877. The decree provided for payment of the secured debt in various instalments by May 1896. The mortgagor died in 1883, having discharged part of the debt. The decree-holder having attached certain family property in execution, the mortgagor's two younger sons, who had not been born at the date of the above decree, objected that their shares were not liable to attachment. This objection prevailed, the Court expressing the opinion that the matter in controversy should be determined in a regular suit. The other defendants in the suit of 1877 had both died in the interval, one of them leaving infant sons. The decree-holder (in whose sole name the mortgage stood) now sued the sons of the mortgagor and their infant nephews for the payment out of the family property of all the unpaid instalments. Held that the plaintiff was not precluded from maintaining the suit against the sons of the mortgagor by the Civil Procedure Code, s. 43. RAMAYYA v. The plaintiff had claimed the value of standing crops or damages for the same. The Court found that the plaintiff had paid the purchase-money, but had not got possession, and ordered defendant to execute a deed of sale. On failure of the defendant to do so, the Court executed a deed of sale in plaintiff's favour under s. 262 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit to recover possession on the strength of the deed of sale. Defendant pleaded that this second suit was barred under s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held that s. 43 was not applicable and did not bar the present suit, because the alleged cause of action was not the breach of the contract, but a new and distinct one arising from the deed of sale which the defendant had contracted to pass. NATRU PANDU v. The kanom not being established, the suit failed. At the time of bringing the suit, plaintiff was aware that the defendants in possession had in various documents admitted that they were kanomdars under the plaintiff's predecessor in title. On the plaintiff now bringing a suit based on the admissions referred to, Held that plaintiff could and should in the previous suit have based his claim in the alternative on the admissions instead of confining that suit to the specific mortgage which he failed to prove. Having chosen to take the course which he did, he was barred from bringing a fresh suit by s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code, as it must be taken that he abandoned or relinquished his claim on the basis of the admissions when he brought his first suit on the kanom specifically alleged. *Krishna Pillai v. 11. Civil Procedure Code, Chs. XLI, XLII, ss. 540-587.—The sections in Chs. 12. Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 562, 568, and 582—Order made on appeal to amend plaint.—On appeal from the decision of a District Munsif in favour of the plaintiffs in a suit for the recovery of rent, the District Judge set aside the decree of the lower Court, ordered a new trial, and directed the amendment of the plaint by inserting the exact boundaries of the land on which the plaintiffs claimed the rent. Held that the order for amendment on the plaint was bad under s. 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure, since the original Court had not "disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point," and that it was likewise bad under s. 582, since there had been no dispute as to the boundaries of the land before the original Court. If the information was necessary, the District Judge should have sent down an issue on the point for trial under s. 566 of the Code. KRISHNAYA NAVADA v. PANCHU possession, and the Subordinate Judge on appeal reversed the decision and remanded the case under s. 562, Civil Procedure Code, for the determination of the question of the amount of mesne profits. Held that s. 562 was not applicable, and that the remand ought to have been made under s. 566. LALLA CHUNILAL v. MOHLI SINGH. I. C. W. N., 340

14. Suit tried out by Court of first instance—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 562, 566.—When a Court of first instance has tried out a suit, the Appellate Court has no jurisdiction to make an order of remand under s. 562, Civil Procedure Code, but if a new issue has to be tried, it should proceed under s. 566, Civil Procedure Code. RAM DAS MONDAL v. 15. Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 562—Court to which remand must be made.—When a suit is not disposed of on a preliminary point, it is not competent to a Court of appeal under s. 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) to remand the case for a fresh trial. The section, moreover, contemplates a remand back to the Court which first disposed of the suit, and to no other Court. BAI SHRI MAJRAJBA v. MAGANLAL BHAI SHANKAR. I. L. R., 19 Bom., 303

16. Remand of case not tried on preliminary issue—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 562 and 573—Irregularity affecting the merits.—Where a District Court reversed the District Munsif's decree and remanded the case for a revised finding on the merits, Held that this procedure was ultra vires and illegal. Held further that, as the irregularity might have affected the merits of the case, s. 578, Civil Procedure Code, was inapplicable. MALLIKARJUNA v. Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 562—Dismissal of suit for want of cause of action.—Where a District Munsif, without entering into the merits of the case, dismissed a suit on the ground that the plaintiffs had no cause of action, and on appeal the Appellate Court reversed his decree and remanded the case, Held that the suit had been disposed of upon a preliminary point within the meaning of s. 562, Civil Procedure Code, and that the remand was right. KANAKAMMAL v. RANGACHARIAR. I. L. R., 20 Mad., 25

18. Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 562, 564, and 566—Refusal of Court of first instance to record evidence tendered—Refusal of Appellate Court to record additional evidence.—The plaintiffs in the Court of first instance produced both documentary and oral evidence in support of their claim. The Court, being satisfied with the documentary evidence produced by the plaintiffs, declined to record the evidence of the witnesses tendered by them. The defendants appealed, and the lower Appellate Court reversed the decree of the Court of first instance, but in its turn declined to allow the plaintiffs, respondents, to produce fresh evidence before it. *Power of Court of special appeal—Irregular same powers as are vested in a Court of regular appeal by ss. 351, 354, and 355, Act VIII of 1859, in respect to a wrong order passed by a lower Appellate

2. — *Special appeal—
Act VIII of 1859, ss. 351, 354, and 355.*—In a suit on a bond executed under a mukhtarnamah, which was not produced, the Court of first instance admitted secondary evidence of it, and decreed the suit. In special appeal, the High Court was of opinion that the secondary evidence had been improperly admitted, and therefore the decree in the plaintiff's favour could not stand. Upon this it was contended that the suit should be dismissed, as the Court hearing a case in special appeal had no power, under such circumstances, either to remand the case or to call for additional evidence. Held that, although the powers conferred by ss. 351, 354, and 355 of Act VIII of 1859 on the Court of regular appeal are not directly given to the Court of special appeal, yet the Court, when it found the order of a lower Appellate Court was wrong, could point out the error and direct the lower Appellate Court to make such order
as would rectify the error. AZUR ALI v. KALI

As a principle of the interpretation of statutes, a distinction must be drawn between cases in which a Court or an official omits to do something which a statute enacts shall be done, and cases in which a Court or an official does something which a statute enacts shall not be done. In the former case, the omission may not amount to more than an irregularity in procedure. In the

Her application was refused, and the Court heard the case ex-parte and passed a decree for the plaintiff. The defendant appealed to the District Judge, who reversed the decree and remanded the case, on the ground that the defendant's application for an adjournment ought to have been granted. 19. ————— Civil Procedure Code (1859), s. 566 Issue not disposed of by the lower Appellate Court—Procedure.—In a suit for money due under a bond, the plaintiff tendered three witnesses in the Court of first instance to prove execution of the bond. That Court, having examined one of such witnesses, declined to examine the others, being satisfied on his evidence of the genuineness of the bond, and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal by the defendant the lower Appellate Court disposed of the sole issue in the appeal, viz., execution or non-execution, in the following words: "I do not think the claim made out by the plaintiff on his own evidence." Held that, under the circumstances above described, it was competent to the High Court in second appeal to act under s. 566 of the Code of Civil Procedure and refer an issue as to the execution or non-execution of the bond in suit to the lower Appellate Court, that issue having practically not been tried at all by the said Court. Kanhai Lal v. The District Munsif, after hearing witnesses for the plaintiffs, passed a decree in their favour as prayed. The absent defendant applied unsuccessfully, under s. 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the decree might be set aside, and then appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who reversed the decree and remanded the suit for decision after taking such further evidence as the said defendants or other parties might produce. On its being contended that, under ss. 562 and 564 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Subordinate Judge had no power to remand the suit for re-trial, Held that, notwithstanding ss. 562 and 564, an Appellate Court has inherent power, in such a case, not only to reverse a decree passed on evidence given by the plaintiff only, the defendant being ex parte, but also to direct a re-trial of the case. PERUMBA NAYAR v. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge reversed the decree and remanded the suit for re-trial, on the ground that certain documentary evidence which had been tendered by a defendant had been excluded, and plaintiff's witnesses who had been cited in the list had not been examined. Held that s. 562 was not applicable to such a case: that the proper course for the Subordinate Judge to take was to act either under s. 518 or 569 by himself taking the evidence which he considered had been wrongly excluded, or to direct the Munsif to take it. PERUMBA NAYAR v. usufructuary mortgage in J's favour, the property hypothecated being the separate property of her husband in which she only had a life-interest. On the latter applying for mutation of names, B objected that he was in proprietary possession under a deed of gift executed by M, and the objection was allowed. In virtue of a clause in the deed of mortgage that, in case any demand was made in respect of the property within the mortgage term, the mortgagee was entitled to sue for the mortgage-money notwithstanding the term had not expired, J sued to recover the money by the sale of the hypothecated property. B, in addition to an objection to the validity of the mortgage based on the deed of gift, pleaded that it was invalid under Hindu law as against him, the next reversioner to the property, there being no legal necessity for the alienation. The lower Appellate Court held that the mortgage was valid as against the deed of gift, but invalid as against the next reversioner. Finding that B was not the next reversioner, it remanded the case to the Court of first instance, with instructions to make certain persons who had applied to that Court to be made parties to the suit, on the ground that they were the nearest heirs to M's deceased husband, but whose application that Court had rejected, defendants in the suit, as also any other persons who might claim to be near heirs, and to determine as between them who was the next reversioner and to further determine whether such next reversioner had relinquished his rights in favour of B, and whether the validity of the mortgage could be questioned on the ground that M, having only a limited interest, had alienated for an indefinite period. It was held that the suit was improperly remanded, and the Court decreed J's claim in respect of the property. BULAKI SINGH v. JAI KISHAN DAS [7 N. W., 208]

28. ———— Order of remand—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1859), ss. 562, 564, and 566—Addition of necessary parties not a ground for remand on a first appeal.—Where a Court of first appeal remanded a case to the Court of first instance for the addition of all necessary parties, and at the same time decided an issue as to the merits, and it appeared that the Court of first instance had not disposed of the case "on a preliminary point, so as to exclude any evidence of fact which appeared to the Appellate Court essential to the determination of the rights of the parties."—Held, first, that, on an appeal from the order of remand, the decision on the merits, on which the order of remand was not based, was not before the High Court on appeal; and, further, that the order of remand was unsustainable under ss. 562 and 564 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1859), which are strictly binding on all Courts of first appeal. The proper course for the lower Appellate Court would have been to join the parties whom it found to be necessary, and then to raise the proper issues as between the plaintiff and those parties, and, if necessary, to refer the issues to the Court of first instance for trial under s. 566. GANESH BHIKAJI JUVEKAR v. 30. ———— Refusal to summon witnesses.—If a defendant's case is not closed, he has a right to have his witnesses summoned and to get an opportunity of producing them if he can do so in time. Where such right was refused to a defendant by the first Court, and his objection on that score was not noticed by the lower Appellate Court, the High Court, on special appeal, remanded the case for a fresh hearing. BRUJO NATH MOOKHOPADHYA v. 31. ———— Insufficient examination of witness—Bad legal advice.—Where the oral evidence taken fell short of the requirements of the Evidence Act, s. 63, only because the witnesses were not properly questioned, the High Court, on special appeal, held it to be unjust to let the plaintiff suffer on account of the inefficiency of his legal adviser, and so remanded the case for re-trial. LOCHUN SINGH v. S. C. NYMOODDIE JOARDAR v. MONCHIEFF

[12 W. R., 140

35. ——— Defect in plaint—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 854.—Where there is a defect in the allegations in a plaint and the subject-matter of the absent allegation has not been tried in the Court below, the proper course is for the Judge to frame an issue, and refer it to the lower Court for trial under Act VIII of 1859, s. 354. KASSENAUTH MOOR v. REEJOONISSA Marsh., 196; 1 Hay, 467

36. ——— Omission to settle issues—Remand for re-trial.—Where no issues have been settled in a suit, the High Court will remand the case for re-trial. JOGESHW RAB v. DOOLUN RAB

[2 N. W., 183

37. ——— Omission to raise material issue—Suit for arrears of rent—Parties.—A case was remanded for re-trial on its merits because it was found, on special appeal, that material error had been committed in consequence of the omission on the part of the lower Appellate Court to frame issues between the parties, e.g., the suit being for arrears of rent, the issue inter alia whether the plaintiffs, who were shareholders with others, were entitled to claim the fraction of the rent for which they sued. SEHO SAROY SINGH v. BECHUN SINGH

[22 W. R., 31

38. ——— Improper demand by Appellate Court—Raising fresh issues.—A sued to eject a raiyat on the ground of his holding over after the term of his pottah had expired. The raiyat denied that he had ever held under a pottah from A, and alleged that the jote belonged to B. Plaintiff's allegations were found to be false, and his suit was dismissed. The lower Appellate Court directed B to be made a defendant, and remanded the suit to have the question of ownership tried between A and B, at the same time agreeing with the Court of first instance that the allegations in the plaint were false. Held that the lower Appellate Court should have dismissed the case, and was wrong in so remanding it. Per CUNNINGHAM, J.—The right of framing new issues arises where the issues framed are insufficient to dispose of the matters raised in the plaint. Ram Dhan Khan v. Haradhan Peramanik, 9 B. L. R., 107 n te; 12 W. R., 404, cited and distinguished. BROOBUN DASS MUNDUL v. BILASHMONEY DASSEN

[1 C. L. R., 415

39. ——— Remand on point raised on issue in lower Court.—A case ought not, as a rule, to be remanded upon a point which has been framed as an issue by the Court below, and brought to the attention of the parties, and where they have failed at the trial to give any evidence upon it. RAM PRASAD v. ABDUL KARIM I. L. R., 9 All., 513

40. ——— Raising fresh issues—Appellate Court—Reference of issues for trial.—An Appellate Court cannot remand a case for trial with instructions to frame new issues. It may refer any issues for trial by the lower Court, whose finding and evidence are to be returned to the Appellate Court for a final decision. CHUNDERNATH SUMA v. ROMANATH SUMA I W. R., 69

41. ——— Appellate Court—Defective or insufficient issues.—Where no preliminary point has been wrongly decided by the Court of first instance, and no evidence has been excluded, and the Appellate Court considers the issues nevertheless to have been defective or insufficient, it is the duty of the latter not to remand the case, but to re-settle the issues and to determine the case itself. FUTTEHOOLAH v. OOMDANISSA BIRRE

[14 W. R., 69

42. ——— Civil Procedure Code (1859), ss. 562 and 566—Illegal order of remand—Duty of Appellate Court when fresh parties or addition or amendment of issues is necessary.—In a suit by mortgagees to redeem a prior mortgage, issues were framed and tried and disposed of in favour of the plaintiffs as to the questions whether the plaintiff's mortgage was valid, whether the mortgage sought to be redeemed had been discharged, and whether the suit was barred by limitation. The Court of first appeal was of opinion that these questions had not been properly considered, and set aside the decree for the plaintiffs, and directed that a fresh trial be held, certain fresh parties being brought on the record. Held (1) that the order of remand was illegal, there being no proper ground for it under ss. 562 and 566 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (2) that the lower Appellate Court should have joined the persons necessary for the suit, and should have so altered or added to the issues as to raise all questions properly arising, and should have referred them for trial to the Court of first instance. KELU MCLACHRI NAYAR v. CHENDU I. L. R., 19 Mad., 157

43. ——— Trial on erroneous issues—Appellate Court.—Where the Munsif, acting erroneously, forced the plaintiffs to amend their plaint and, in consequence of that amendment, the Munsif also amended the issues and tried the suit on an entirely erroneous issue, the Judge of the lower Appellate Court, as a Court of equity, should, of his own motion, have sent the case back to the Munsif, directing him to try it on its merits, and pointing out that he had taken a wrong view of the law. GRU PRASAD ROY v. RAS MOHUN MUKHOPADHYA

[1 C. L. R., 431

44. ——— Wrong issue framed by lower Court—Finding in judgment on the point raised by correct issue.—Where the lower Appellate Court framed a wrong issue for decision, but it appeared from its judgment that there was a finding on the point which would have been raised if the correct issue had been framed, the High Court in second appeal refused to remand the case for a new

finding on that issue. VISHNU RAMCHANDRA v. GANESH APPAJI CHAUDHARI

45. ——— Illegal remand — Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 354.—In a suit for a declaration of plaintiff's title to and possession of a share of certain property, she alleged that her title was derived by purchase from one E, who held under a deed of gift from T, the wife of the original holder. Defendants' case was that their title was derived from the three grandsons of one E K by his daughter C. The first Court dismissed the suit, considering that the defendants' title was proved, and that T was not competent to dispose of the property by gift to plaintiff's vendor. The lower Appellate Court, finding that it was not satisfactorily proved that the defendants' alleged three vendors were really the daughter's sons of E K, remanded the case for a finding on that issue. Held, with reference to s. 354, Act VIII of 1859, that the order of remand was illegal. HUROSOONDURIE DEBIA v. UNNO POORNA DEBIA . . . 11 W. R., 550

46. ——— Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 566.—The karnavan of a tarwad in Malabar sued to recover property acquired by his sister (deceased) and now in the occupation of the defendants, her children. The parties were Mapillas. The defendants pleaded (1) that the property had been given to them and their mother jointly; (2) that their mother was not governed by Marumakkatayam law. The Court of first instance found the first-mentioned plea to be good, and dismissed the suit, and also found that the family was governed by Marumakkatayam law. The Court of first appeal dissented from the above finding as to the first plea, and, without deciding the second point, remanded the case for the trial of a general issue as to the mode of devolution of self-acquired property in Marumakkatayam Mapilla families in North Malabar, and ultimately it dismissed the suit on that issue. Held that the order of remand was not one which should have been made under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 566, and the proceedings taken under it were irregular. ILLIKA PAKRAMAR v. KUTTI KUNHAMRD [I. L. R., 17 Mad., 69]

47. ——— Dismissal of case on point not arising—Suit under s. 230, Civil Procedure Code, 1859.—Where a lower Appellate Court found that a suit falling substantially under s. 230, Act VIII of 1859, which had been received and numbered as such, had been subsequently dismissed by the Court of first instance upon a point which did not properly arise under that section,—Held that it should have remanded the case to the first Court for trial and decision under that section. SABIR KHAN v. RAM LUCKHEE CHOWDHRAIN . . . 10 W. R., 438

48. ——— Remand for further evidence—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 352, 354.—Held by JACKSON, J. (whose opinion prevailed), that where a lower Appellate Court is of opinion that further evidence should be taken, it may take such evidence itself, or require the first Court to do so, but it is not competent to remand a case for a second decision upon any of the issues, such a course being forbidden by s. 352, Act VIII of 1859. Held by MARKBY, J. (dissenting), that a lower Appellate Court has power, under s. 354, to send back a case for trial upon an issue not satisfactorily tried by the Court of first instance. UMBKA CHURN MUNDUL v. RAMDHUN MOHURRIE . . . 11 W. R., 35

49. ——— Remand for re-trial on particular issue—Improper remand—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, ss. 562, 566, 567—Decision by lower Court on the merits.—A decree in a suit having been passed on the merits by the Court of first instance, the Court of appeal, being of opinion that an issue not tried by the former Court ought to have been tried, reversed the decree, and under s. 562 of the Civil Procedure Code remanded the case for trial upon that issue. Held that the order reversing the decree and remanding the case for trial of the issue was improper, and that the proper course for the Appellate Court to have taken was that laid down by ss. 566 and 567 of the Code. MOKUND LAL v. HURBULLUBH NARAIN SINGH . . . 12 C. L. R., 136

50. ——— Obscurity in judgment—Affirming judgment of lower Court.—Where an Appellate Court has considered a case and come to the same conclusion as the Court of first instance, occasional obscurity in the judgment of the former does not constitute a proper ground for a remand. BROJO NATH SEN v. SOORJA KANT SEN [25 W. R., 276]

51. ——— Omission to try ground of appeal taken—Review of judgment.—Where a ground of appeal stated in the written memorandum is not alluded to when the appeal comes on for hearing, the Court is not at fault if no decision is passed upon it. If, having had his attention called to it, a Judge fails to decide such point, the proper course for the parties aggrieved is to ask him to review his judgment. In neither case is the omission ground for remand on appeal. YUSOOF ALI CHOWDHRY v. FY-ZOOMISSA KHATOON CHOWDHRAIN 15 W. R., 296

52. ——— Omission to decide point raised—Issue, though trifling, left undecided.—Where the lower Courts have come to no decision on a point raised, the plaintiff in special appeal has a right to a remand for the point to be tried, even though very trifling. MULLICK AMANUT ALI v. UKLOO PASEH . . . 25 W. R., 140

53. ——— Improper reception of evidence by lower Court—Ground for decision, Consideration of.—On second appeal, the High Court has, generally speaking, no right to look at the evidence to decide whether the remaining evidence, in a case other than that which has been improperly admitted, is sufficient to warrant the finding of the Court below. The only cases which can be, with propriety, disposed of under such circumstances without a remand, are those where, independently of the evidence improperly admitted, the lower Court has apparently arrived at its conclusions upon other grounds. WOMES CHUNDER CHATTERJEE v. CHONDEN CHURN ROY CHOWDHRY

[24 W. R., 392]

55. — Omission to consider evidence—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 372.—When important evidence has not been carefully examined by the Judge in the lower Court, the Appellate Court will, on special appeal, remand the suit under s. 372 of Act VIII of 1859. DEGUMBER DOSSEE v. KISSEN DHUR NUNDY

[1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 35]

56. — Omission to decide material issue—Decree based on point not in issue.—The lower Appellate Court not having decided material issues and having based its decree on a document not recorded in the case, the decree was reversed, and the case remanded for a fresh decision on the merits. NICHABHAI PRAGJI v. Code.—After a case is closed in the lower Court and is brought up on appeal to the superior Court, it cannot be remanded for re-trial on fresh evidence, on the ground that the Judge below failed to try one of the issues. 58. — Omission to try issue—Reversal of finding on first issue—Omission to decide second issue.—The finding of the Court below on the first issue being reversed, the suit was remanded for trial of the second issue, the Judge having omitted to determine that, and the defendant not having given the evidence upon it, in consequence of the first issue being found for him on the evidence given by the plaintiff. MAGANBHAI HEMCHAND v. 59. — Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 351, 352.—In remanding a case to a Court of first instance for the trial of an issue which that Court had been directed to try, but had not tried, a Judge was held to have acted with strict propriety and in conformity with the provisions of ss. 351 and 352, Act VIII of 1859. RAM CHAND MOOKERJEE v. KAMENEE DEBBA 10 W. R., 236

60. — Finding on issues framed.—The High Court will not in a special appeal remand the case where there has been a distinct finding by the District Judge on the only issue framed by him, though he may have omitted to find on another issue raised before the Munsif, but not called for by either party on appeal. MOTI BHAGVAN v. 61. — Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 352.—Where the lower Court had decided a case on the merits, and the Appellate Court did not find that there had been any omission to try any issue or determine any question essential to the decision of the case on the merits, or that further evidence was necessary to enable it to determine any such issue or question, He'd the Appellate Court was in error in remanding the case under s. 352 for a fresh trial. MAHESH CHUNDRA DAS v. [2 B. L. R., S. N., 13; 10 W. R., 388]

62. — Insufficiency of evidence for decision of material issue—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 351, 352.—Where there is no sufficient evidence before the Appellate Court for the disposal of an issue which is material to the determination of the suit, the proper course to be followed is to remand the case under s. 351, and not under s. 351. RAM PERSHAD v. KISHNA 3 Agra, 148

63. — Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 354.—Where an Appellate Court finds that there is no evidence upon the record to enable it to decide a question at issue between the parties, and remands the case under s. 354 of the Code for additional evidence, it ought to require such evidence with the finding of the first Court to be sent up to it for decision. SHUMBOO CHUNDER SURNOKAR v. RUSSICK CHUNDER CHUNG 15 W. R., 346

64. — Absence of evidence on material issue.—The lower Appellate Court has no power to remand a case, which has come before it on appeal, to the Court of first instance for a second trial, except where the first Court has decided

RAMA KORE v. LALLA BHUGWAN LALL
[22 W. R., 224]

66. — Point not raised in Court below—Sufficiency of evidence for decision.—The Appellate Court will not remand a case for retrial on a point not raised in the Court below if the evidence already recorded is sufficient to enable the Appellate Court itself to decide the point.
HABIDAS PURSHOTAM v. GAMBLE
[12 Bom., 23]

67. — Decision on sufficient evidence Appellate Court—Improper remand.—A case should not be remanded when the Appellate Court is of opinion that the lower Court cannot properly come to a different decision upon the evidence than that to which it has already come.
BONOMALE CHURN MATHE v. SHIROOP HICOTAIT
[14 W. R., 60]

68. — Decision on preliminary point—Appellate Court having all the evidence before it.—Where a lower Appellate Court has before it all the evidence which the parties wish to adduce, and decides upon a preliminary point (e.g., the genuineness of a potab), it has no authority to remand the case, but should itself try it.
RAJ JOY SEIN v. NUNDO MATHE DABEA
[10 W. R., 374]

69. — Decision on one issue out of many—Decision after hearing all the evidence—Civil Procedure Code, 1852, ss. 562, 563, 566—Illegal order of remand.—A District Munsif, having taken all the evidence offered on the issues in a suit, disposed of the suit upon his finding on one of the issues without deciding the rest. On appeal the District Judge reversed the decree and remanded the suit for the trial of the issues left untried. Held that, under s. 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the order of remand was illegal.
AMMA R. KUNHUNNI
[1 L. R., 9 Mad., 355]

70. — Trial on one of several issues—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 562, 563, 564, 566—Reversal on that issue on appeal.—In a suit for possession of property by right of inheritance, the Court framed six issues, four of which it tried and decided. With reference to its finding upon the principal of these issues, which related to the plaintiff's legitimacy, the Court dismissed the suit, observing that in the view which it took of the case, the determination of the remaining issues was unnecessary. Some of the defendants had filed a statement of defence upon which no issues were framed, and no evidence taken, apparently in consequence of the attention of the Court being directed almost exclusively to the main issue as to the plaintiff's legitimacy. There was no formal order excluding evidence on any point. On appeal, the High Court reversed the first Court's finding on the issue with reference to which the suit had been dismissed below. Held by ENGE, C.J., and MAHMOOD, J. (STRAIGHT, J., dissenting), that s. 562 of the Civil Procedure Code applied not only to cases where the first Court had expressly excluded evidence, but also to cases where the parties were or might have been misled by the act of the Court as to the issues or the evidence necessary, and where, in consequence of the Court erroneously considering one issue only, the parties did not tender or bring forward their evidence; and that, as in the present case evidence had been excluded in this broad sense, s. 562 (the operation of which in such cases should be rather expanded than limited) was applicable, and the case should be remanded for trial of the remaining issues. Held by STRAIGHT, J., contra, that, with reference to ss. 562, 563, and 564, the case could not be remanded under s. 562, because it had not been disposed of upon a preliminary point, so as to exclude evidence of fact, and the Court should therefore proceed to dispose of it upon the evidence on the record, if any; and that an issue should be remitted to the lower Court under s. 564.

[1 L. R., 10 All., 289]

71. — Omission to decide on point for decision.—The District Judge not having come to any positive finding in his decree on the point for decision laid down by himself on appeal, the suit was remanded for a trial on the merits.
RAMDAS SAKHARLAL v. GANGADHAR RAGHUNATH DONGRE
[2 Bom., 186; 2nd Ed., 178]

72. — Order of execution on insufficient evidence—Duty of Appellate Court.—When a lower Court, on insufficient evidence of a decree having been kept in force, orders execution, the Appellate Court should not summarily reverse the order, but should remit the case, that the decree-holder may give further proof of the fact.

[8 W. R., 276]

73. — Omission to decide on merits of case—Suit dismissed on preliminary point—Power to decide case if reversed on that point on appeal—Remand.—When a Court of first instance, after taking evidence, dismisses a suit upon a preliminary objection without giving a decision upon the merits of the case, and the decree is reversed on appeal, the Court of appeal, if it considers the evidence on record sufficient, may decide the case and is not bound to remand it for trial under s. 562 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1877.

74. — Decision by lower Court of preliminary point—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 351.—An Appellate Court is not justified in sending back a case for re-trial under s. 351 of the Code of Civil Procedure, merely because the lower Court has disposed of it upon a preliminary point, unless such point has been so disposed of as to exclude

76. ——— Evidence sufficient, but further inquiry necessary—Reference of issue for trial—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 354.—S. 351, Act VIII of 1859, is meant for those cases in which a lower Court has disposed of a case on a purely preliminary point. When abundant evidence has been taken, if the lower Appellate Court think any further inquiry necessary, the proper course is not to remand the case to the lower Court, but to frame an issue, and to refer the same to the lower Court for trial under s. 354. *RAM CHUNDER GOOPTA v. On appeal, the District Judge held that it was unnecessary to determine the question of jurisdiction, as he had power in any event, under s. 208 of the N.-W. P. 80. ——— *Suit instituted in Revenue instead of Civil Court—N.-W. P. The objection was allowed, and the suit dismissed. On appeal by the plaintiff, the Assistant Collector's decision was affirmed. The Appellate Court had not before it the materials necessary for the determination of the suit. Held, reading together ss. 207 and 208 of Act XII of 1881 (N.-W. P. Rent Act), that though the objection to the jurisdiction was taken in the first Court and repeated before the Appellate Court, the latter should only have pro tanto entertained it for the purpose of determining to what Court it should direct its order of remand, and should not have passed an order the effect of which was to maintain the dismissal of the suit. *DEBI SARAN LAL v. remand.—Where the Court of first instance decides both on the general merits and the plea of limitation, and the Judge of the Appellate Court considers that the evidence upon the record is not sufficient to allow of a satisfactory judgment, and that he is in a position legally to order further evidence to be taken, he ought to proceed in the manner provided in ss. 354 to 357 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but has no right to set aside the first Court's decree and remand the case for re-trial. GOOROO PERSHAD DUTT v. SREENATH BANERJEE . . . 15 W. R., 314

84. ———— Decision on merits—Insufficiency of evidence—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 354.—When the decision of a lower Court is not on a preliminary point, the lower Appellate Court cannot remand the suit to that Court, with directions to take further evidence and to re-try the case, but the appeal must be kept pending on the file, and the record must be sent to the lower Court, with orders to take the necessary evidence. KALLER SUNKUR ROY v. KISHTO DOLAL CHOWDHRY

[W. R., 1864, 296]

85. ———— Additional evidence—Issue, Trial of, by lower Court—Defect of parties—Successor of Judge making remand, Power of.—When an Appellate Court remands a case under s. 351 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1859, for the trial of an issue which the lower Court may have omitted to raise or to try, it is not limited to the evidence then on the record, but may keep the case pending on its own file until the return of the first Court's finding on the issue, with the evidence recorded on the trial thereof, or the Appellate Court may itself try the issue so raised. Where the evidence is accepted by a Subordinate Judge as sufficient to warrant a decree, and the case is only remanded for a defect of parties, his successor is justified, when the case is returned by the first Court, in respecting the former judgment and looking upon the evidence as prima facie good and sufficient. WISE v. ISHAN CHUNDER BANERJEE

[14 W. R., 380]

86. ———— Decision as to costs—Power to remand case for trial on merits where appeal is only as to costs.—On an appeal as to costs only, the Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to return the case for trial on its merits. MUTHERA PERSHAD v. BUNDEE ROY . . . 4 N. W., 20

87. ———— Decision on second trial—Insufficiency of evidence—Evidence taken at first trial.—In a suit to obtain possession of miras land, the Court of original jurisdiction decreed for plaintiff on the evidence, but on appeal its decision was reversed, on the ground that the claim had not been properly valued, and plaintiff was permitted to bring a fresh action. At the trial of the second action the Munsif recorded his previous decree and some additional evidence, which the District Judge on appeal considered to be insufficient. Held that, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, the Judge, if not satisfied with the evidence taken at the second trial, should have allowed the plaintiff to give again the evidence adduced at the former trial. The lower

Court's decree was therefore reversed, and the suit remanded in order that this might be done. JOGI BIN NIMBAJI v. SOMAJI BIN BAPAJI GURAY

[1 Bom., 166]

88. ———— Decision as to admission of evidence—Additional evidence—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 354.—The defendant pleaded payment and produced a letter of acknowledgment said to have been written by the plaintiff. The plaintiff denied its genuineness, and the Principal Sudder Ameen rejected the testimony of two pyadas who deposed to the payment. On appeal the Judge remanded the case, requiring the lower Court to give the appellant the opportunity of proving the letter, and after recording a fresh finding to return the case to his Court. Held that the lower Court was bound to pronounce a distinct opinion as to the value of the evidence, and not to have rejected it altogether. Held also that the Judge was wrong in remanding the case under s. 354, Act VIII of 1859, as he could have decided the case himself, taking such additional evidence as might appear necessary. RUNPAL SINGH v. JOY MUNGUL SINGH . . . 11 W. R., 106

89. ———— Finding on evidence—Improper remand—Duty of Appellate Court.—Where the ground of regular appeal to the lower Appellate Court was that the Court of first instance ought to have found that an ijara existed, it was the duty of the Appellate Court to determine whether that fact had been proved, and not to remand the case for re-trial. MAHOMED AHSAN v. MAHOMED YASIN

[9 W. R., 106]

90. ———— Issue of minority raised on appeal—Facts entitling mortgagee to decree.—Where, in a suit to make absolute a conditional sale and to obtain a share in a certain village mortgaged to plaintiff (the usual year of grace having been given and money been paid into Court in satisfaction considerably after the term allowed by law), there is no issue respecting the minority of some of the mortgagors, the case will not be sent back to the Appellate Court for inquiry whether certain of the mortgagors were minors, or whether the others mortgaged for such purposes as would bind the minors, notwithstanding one of the lower Courts has found the fact of the minority of one of the mortgagors. SUBDUL v. BULDEO . . . 2 N. W., 23

91. ———— Case inconsistent with plaint—Power of Appellate Court to remand—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 354.—If the Appellate Court is of opinion that the plaintiff, in argument before itself, is endeavouring to obtain something other than what he claims in the plaint, it is bound to dismiss the suit; but if it thinks that the plaint can be reconciled with the argument used on the appeal, and the case resulting is supported by the evidence, it is bound to determine the appeal—not to make an order under Act VIII of 1859, s. 354. TILUCK CHUNDER DUTT CHOWDHRY v. BROJO SOONDUR MITTER . . . 24 W. R., 121 of portion of case while remanding substantial issue.—A lower Appellate Court which remanded a suit to the first Court for decision of the substantial part of the dispute should not have confirmed the decision of the first Court regarding only one part of the claim. MADHUB CHUNDER DRY v. RAM DYAL GUHO 8 W. R., 303

3. SECOND REMAND.

98. ——— Power of Appellate Court—Decree reversed on appeal—Error or defect affecting merits of case or jurisdiction.—An Appellate Court can remand a case a second time on account of error, defect, or irregularity of procedure in passing a decree or order, provided the error, defect, or irregularity be such as to affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court. When a suit has been regularly heard and determined, and on appeal the decree is reversed, the Appellate Court has the discretionary power to remand the case only if the decree should have been upon a preliminary point, and have the effect of excluding the consideration of evidence essential to the rights of the parties. MUNIAPPAN NAIDU v. IYASAMY MUDELY [5 Mad., 813]

94. ——— Omission to carry out first order of High Court—Substantial trial on the merits.—Where the lower Court had not fully carried out an order of the High Court remanding the case, but the case appeared to have been substantially tried fully on its merits, the High Court thought there should not be a second remand. KASHEENATH DEB v. SHIBESUREE DEBIA 8 W. R., 503

95. ——— Remand after trial and decision on evidence—Appellate Court, Powers of—Objection taken on appeal—Act VIII of 1859, s. 351—Costs.—A lower Appellate Court is not competent to remand a case for a second decision, except as provided by s. 351, Act VIII of 1859, and therefore has no power to remand a case when a Court of first instance has investigated the merits of the case and passed its judgment upon the evidence. The objection that a case has been improperly remanded by the lower Appellate Court can be taken in special appeal from the decree passed upon the remand, although a special appeal might have been preferred from the order of remand, but the appellants were held not entitled to their costs. MAJORAM OJHA v. 99. ——— Remand for re-trial—Re-opening of whole case.—Where a suit was remanded by the lower Appellate Court for a "re-trial," the intention of the order of remand was held to be that the whole case was to be gone into de novo, the plaintiff being allowed to prove her case in any way she could. GUDADHUR DUTT v. SHUSHEE MONER DOSSIA 21 W. R., 7

101. ——— Power of Court hearing remanded cases—Remand on particular issue—Power to proceed on other issues.—A Court to which a case is remanded for re-trial on a particular issue, amongst others, cannot, on remand, allow that issue to be abandoned, and proceed to try the case upon the other issues raised. SHIB CHUNDER LAMIRI v. 102. ——— Remand on one point—Re-opening of others.—When a case is remanded to the lower Appellate Court for decision of a question—e.g., one of title,—that Court has no authority to go beyond the order of remand and reopen a matter already adjudicated upon between the parties. SHAHAB TEWARRE v. KISHOREE SAHOY SINGH 24 W. R., 330

103. ——— Remand for trial of issue under s. 354, Civil Procedure Code, 1859, Effect of.—Where an Appellate Court, in pursuance of Act VIII of 1859, s. 354, sends an issue down to the first Court in order that such evidence as the parties desired to adduce upon it may be taken and returned, the result is not to remand the case for re-trial, the first Court being functus officio in respect to each portion of the matter as it had already considered and determined. GOSWAIN DOWLAT GEER v. 105. Absence of Judge who passed decree—Jurisdiction of his successor.—Where a case is remanded to the lower Court to record reasons for its judgment, if the Judge who passed the decree is absent, the superior Court should be informed of it by his successor. Under such circumstances, his successor has no jurisdiction. Application should be made to the Bench which granted the order of remand for an order for the present Judge to re-try the case de novo. MANICK SETH v. KHETTER-MOHUN GOSSAMER. 1 Ind. Jur., N. [2 W. R., 275]

107. Remand for particular issue—Right to open case in full.—A rent case having been remanded to a lower Appellate Court with a view to its being ascertained whether an amulnamah produced by the plaintiff was the same as a pottah filed in a survey case, the Judge found that it was the same, but the pottah was not the one which the defendant had given to the plaintiff to file in the survey case. He accordingly reversed his predecessor's decree for rent, and adjudged plaintiff to pay damages under s. 3, Act VI of 1862. Held that the additional finding was not opposed to the order of remand; that the whole case was reopened; and that the Judge had authority to award the damages without appeal on that point. PAN CHANDRA SURMA CHOWDHRY v. [10 W. R., 339]

108. Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 562—Order of remand—Issues undecided—Procedure.—A Subordinate Judge decided a suit on the ground (1) that it was res judicata; (2) that it was barred by limitation. On appeal, the Assistant Judge upheld the decree on the first-mentioned ground without deciding the point of limitation. On second appeal, the High Court reversed the Assistant Judge's decision, holding that the suit was not res judicata, and remanded the case to be tried on the merits. On receipt of the order of the High Court, the Assistant Judge reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge without giving any decision on the point of limitation and remanded the case to the Subordinate Judge to be tried on the merits. From this order the defendant appealed to the High Court. Held that the order of remand by the Assistant Judge was unauthorized under s. 562 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). When the High Court remanded the case to be tried on the merits, the whole case was left open to the Assistant Judge, and, before he could reverse the Subordinate Judge's decree, he was bound, under s. 562 of the

109. Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 566—Power of Court to disregard findings returned—Appeal under Letters Patent, High Court, N.-W. P., cl. 10.—A single Judge of the High Court hearing a second appeal made an order of reference under s. 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the return of the reference the appeal came before another Judge, who, holding that the reference was unnecessary and that the original findings of fact in the Court below were sufficient to dispose of the appeal, disregarded the findings on the reference, and dismissed the appeal. In appeal under s. 10 of the Letters Patent, it was held that it was competent to the Judge before whom the appeal had subsequently come to disregard the findings on the order of reference. MURABAK HUSAIN v. 110. Case remanded on issue of limitation—Right to open whole appeal.—In a case remanded to the lower Appellate Court for trial, by the Court of first instance, of the issue of limitation, which the appellant had not been allowed the opportunity of meeting, it was ruled that, upon the decision of that issue, it would be open to the parties to appeal upon the whole case, notwithstanding the appeal already had. RUGHOO NUNDUN PERSHAD SINGH v. [10 W. R., 385]

111. Re-opening of case.—Under an order of remand in a boundary suit in which the Privy Council had made an order in a former appeal,—Held that the High Court had no power to go behind the order of the Privy Council, and that so much of the High Court's decision as re-opened on fresh evidence what had previously been decided must be set aside, but that the evidence that had thus been brought to bear on the case was entitled to consideration so far as it bore on those portions of the suit in respect of which the former decision of the Privy Council was not conclusive. COURT OF WARDS v. 112. Case sent by Judge to lower Court for further evidence.—In a suit for enhancement of rent, which had been remanded to the lower Appellate Court, with the instruction that the defendant had produced sufficient evidence to raise the presumption that he held his tenure at a fixed rate from the Permanent Settlement, and that it was for the Judge to give an opinion how far the plaintiff was able to rebut that presumption,—Held that there was nothing objectionable in the Judge directing the first Court to hear further evidence upon the point. BAKHAL CHUNDER TEWARER v. 115. ——— Object of remand—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 354.—The object of a remand under s. 354, Act VIII of 1859, is not that the Judge should try the issues on the evidence already taken, because that the Court sitting in regular appeal can do for itself, but that he should take such evidence as the parties may have to offer for the determination of the issues. ABDOOL KHYRAT v. JUMALOODDEEN HOSSEIN . 10 W. R., 244

116. ——— Remand to Appellate Court—Power to take additional evidence.—Where a case is remanded to a lower Appellate Court under s. 354 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1859, the Judge may, under s. 355, admit additional evidence, provided he records his reasons for doing so on the proceedings of the Court. KALIKRISTO TAGORN v. 117. ——— Taking evidence on remand—Power to take additional evidence on remand where order of remand does not so order—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 562, 566, and 569.—Suit by the adoptive daughter of a temple dancing woman, deceased, to compel the trustees of the temple to permit the performance of a certain ceremony, in view to her entering on the duties and emoluments attached to the office of her adoptive mother. On second appeal, the High Court directed the return of a finding on the issue (previously framed, but not tried) whether the plaintiff's adoption was valid. Fresh evidence was taken, and the finding was that the adoption was made with the intention that the girl should be prostituted while she was still a minor. Held that the lower Court had power to take additional evidence on the issue remanded, although not specially authorized to do so by the order of remand. KAMALAKSHI v. 120. ——— Examination of witnesses—Fresh evidence.—In a case remanded for a finding as to whether a confirmatory pottah had been really given or not, it was held that, as the order of remand did not restrict the Judge to the evidence on the record, he was at liberty to examine the witnesses who were in Court. RAM SUNKER SEIN v. NILKANT BISWAS . . . 20 W. R., 392

121. ——— Hearing fresh evidence—Hearing defendant who did not appear on original hearing.—When a suit has been dismissed upon a preliminary point, and the decision on that point has been reversed by the Appellate Court, and the case goes down with a view to trial on its merits, evidence may properly be received even from defendants who had appeared, and a fortiori from a defendant who had not appeared. KOONJ BEHARY AWUSTEE v. 122. ——— Objection taken at former hearing and disposed of—Remand for re-hearing—Objection to chitta.—Where a review had been granted for the purpose of seeing whether a chitta ought not to be used, and the case was remanded for re-hearing, the party was held to be concluded from objecting that the chitta was improperly made use of upon the re-hearing. MAKHUN KOOSSE v. TINGOWHERE DUTT . . . 14 W. R., 22

123. ——— Remand assuming possession—Power of Judge to try question of possession.—Where the High Court, proceeding on the assumption that appellants (plaintiffs) were in possession, remanded a case to a Zillah Court, with instructions to pass a declaratory decree, if that Court was satisfied that the act complained of was so recent and of such a nature as to entitle plaintiffs to a declaratory decree, it was held (by KEMP, J., decreeing the appeal) that the Zillah Judge was wrong in re-opening the whole question of possession. Held (by JACKSON, J.) that the issue of possession being one which clearly arose on the statements of the parties, the Zillah Judge was not in error in trying it. PUREE JAN KHATOON v. 132. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 567—Discretion of Court.—Where a first Appellate Court has remanded a case to the Court of first instance for the trial of issues, and where, on the return of findings on these issues, objections under s. 567 of the Civil Procedure Code have not been filed until after the expiration of the prescribed period, the Appellate Court, though not bound to entertain the objections, should nevertheless, upon the hearing of the remand, allow the party filing them to be heard with regard to them. Ratan Singh v. Wasir, I. L. R., 1 All., 165, and Akbari Begam v. Wilayat Ali, I. L. R., 2 All., 908, referred to. An Appellate Court, because it remands issues, does not therefore, in the absence of subsequent objection by either or both of the parties to the findings when returned, divest itself of its power to exercise its judicial mind as to the propriety of such findings; but, apart from any objection by the parties, it should examine and test them to see whether or not they ought to be accepted. Akbari Begam v. 184. ——— Findings to which no objection is preferred—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 566—Appellate Court, Powers of—Error or irregularity.—Held that an Appellate Court is not bound to accept a finding returned to it by a Court of first instance, under s. 563 of Act X of 1877, merely because no objections to such finding are preferred, but is competent to examine the evidence on which such finding is founded, and to satisfy itself that it is correct and fit to be accepted. Noorun v. Khoda Baksh, 1 Agra, 50, dissented from. Ratan Singh v. Wasir, I. L. R., 1 All., 165, followed. Held also that, assuming that an Appellate Court, in deciding a case in a manner inconsistent with and opposed to the finding returned to it by the Court of first instance under that section, in the absence of objections, acted irregularly, its decree could not be reversed, or the case remanded on account of such irregularity, such irregularity not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court. AKBARI BEGAM v. WILAYAT ALI . I. L. R., 2 All., 908

185. ——— Duty of Appellate Court—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 567, 574.—Where a first Appellate Court has remanded a case to the Court of first instance for the trial of issues, and where, on the return of the findings on these issues, no objections have been preferred under s. 567 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Appellate Court, after the period fixed for presenting objections, may, at its discretion, receive or decline to receive any written objection, but is, in any case, bound to consider the findings of the lower Court on the merits, and is not precluded from hearing arguments for and against the findings at the hearing of the appeal. Akbari Begam v. Wilayat Ali, I. L. R., 2 All., 908, followed. The imperative provisions of s. 574 of the Civil Procedure Code apply alike to cases remanded by the first Appellate Court for the trial of issues and to those in which no such remand has taken place. *UMED ALI v. 187. ——— Appeal from order of remand—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 562—What questions can be raised—Extent of appeal from order of remand.—An appeal from an order on appeal remanding a suit for re-trial is not to be confined to the question whether the remand has been made contrary to the provisions of s. 562 of Act X of 1877 or not, but the question whether the decision of the Appellate Court on the preliminary point is correct or not may also be raised and determined in such an appeal. BADAM v. IMRAT

[I. L. R., 2 All., 675]

188. ——— Power of Appellate Court to deal with whole appeal after return of findings—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 561, 566.—In a second appeal by the defendant, in which the plaintiff filed objections to the decree under s. 531 of the Civil Procedure Code, the High Court, without giving judgment on the appeal, stated (giving reasons) the opinion that the appellant would be entitled to succeed, and at the same time remitted as issue under s. 566 of the Code with reference to the plaintiff's objections. At that time the appeal was apparently not argued out, and the true meaning of the facts as found was obviously not present to the mind of the Court. Held that, upon the return of the findings on remand, the Court could not treat the appeal as already decided and the objections the sole matter for consideration, but must consider both appeal and objections and decide the whole case. Held, however, that where Judges have heard arguments on some of the issues and have expressed their views thereon and have remitted another issue or issues under s. 536, they are not bound, on the return of findings, to hear the case de novo, but may confer counsel to argument upon the findings. LACHMAN PRASAD v. JAMNA PRASAD

[I. L. R., 10 All., 162]

189. ——— Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 562—Power of the High Court to go into the merits on appeal from a remand order.—The Court of first instance dismissed a suit as barred by limitation. In appeal that decision was reversed, and the case was remanded under s. 562 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Against the order of remand the defendant appealed to the High Court under cl. 26 of s. 593 of the Civil Procedure Code. It was contended by the plaintiff that the High Court had no power to decide the point of limitation, but could only consider whether the order of remand satisfied the requirements of s. 562 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held by the Full Bench that in an appeal against such an order of remand the power of the High Court is not confined to the question whether that order satisfies the requirements of s. 562; but may also determine the correctness of the lower Appellate Court's decision on the preliminary point on which the Court of first instance disposed of the case. BADAM v. IMRAT, I. L. R., 2 All., 675, followed. BHAU BALA v. BAPAJI BAPUJI . I. L. R., 14 Bom., 14

140. ——— Disposal of suit on preliminary point—Reversal by Appellate Court of decree on such point and irregular remand of case under s. 562, Civil Procedure Code, 1877, for trial of a certain issue—Power of succeeding Judge of Appellate Court to re-try such point.—A Court of first instance dismissed a suit upon a preliminary point. On appeal by the plaintiff against the decree of such Court, the then Judge of the Appellate Court, Mr. B, reversed the decree upon such preliminary point and remanded the suit under s. 562 of Act X of 1877 for the trial of a certain issue. The Court of first instance tried such issue and made a decree in accordance with its finding thereon. On appeal against the decree of the Court of first instance, the defendant again raised such preliminary point. The then Judge of the Appellate Court, Mr. K, dismissed the suit upon such preliminary point. Held that, as, although Mr. B had irregularly remanded the suit under s. 562 of Act X of 1877, his decision disposed of such preliminary point, and only left open for trial the issue which he had directed to be tried, Mr. K was not competent to re-try and decide such preliminary point. SURAJ DIN v. 141. ———— Practice—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 588.—Upon an appeal under s. 588, cl. (a), of the Civil Procedure Code, from an order of an Appellate Court under s. 562, remanding a case which has been disposed of upon a preliminary point in the Court of first instance, the High Court may enter into the merits of the adjudication by the Court of first instance on the preliminary point, and may, if it finds the order of the lower Appellate Court defective, allow the party who had the benefit of a decree in the first Court to retain that benefit. LOKI MANTO v. 142. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 562, 564, 566, 584, 588 (28), 590.—Where a lower Appellate Court, instead of remanding a suit under s. 566 of the Civil Procedure Code, erroneously remands it under s. 562, and the party aggrieved by its order appeals to the High Court, under cl. (28), s. 588, the High Court cannot deal with the case as if it were a first appeal from a decree. All that the High Court can do is to rectify the procedure of the lower Appellate Court, and to direct that it decide the case itself on the merits. Badam v. Imrat, I. L. was remanded on special appeal by the High Court to the District Judge (who had meanwhile returned to his appointment), who re-opened the whole case, and passed a decree directly opposed to that of his predecessor, in which he confirmed the Munsif's decree. Held that the decree of the Judge should be reversed, and the suit again remanded, in order that he might pass a decree for the plaintiff, in accordance with the view of the case expressed by the Acting Judge, with which the High Court saw no ground, upon the special appeal before it, to interfere. BABAJI BIN RAMJI v. 145. ———— Procedure when case comes on appeal after remand—Erroneous order of remand.—A Subordinate Judge on appeal, having framed an issue, remanded the case under s. 351, Civil Procedure Code, 1859, to the first Court for trial thereof, but, instead of directing that the finding should be returned to his own Court, he directed the Munsif to give the plaintiff a decree in accordance with the finding at which he might arrive. The Munsif having decided the case accordingly, it went up on appeal to the Additional Judge. Held that the proper course for the Additional Judge was simply to confine himself to considering whether the decision of the Court below on the issue directed was correct or not: he had no power to go behind the order of the Subordinate Judge on the previous occasion. BEDUN BUDOOAH v. Held further that the legality of the remand order and the subsequent proceedings could, under s. 591 of the Code, be questioned in second appeal from the decree in the suit, though no appeal had been preferred against the order itself under s. 568, cl. 28. RAMSHEKH SINGH v. 148.—Practice—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 562, 598, cl. 28.—Upon an appeal under cl. 28 of s. 588 of the Civil Procedure Code, against an order of remand under s. 562, the High Court is not restricted to the consideration of the form of the order, but may examine it on its merits. Where an Appellate Court passed an order under s. 562, remanding a case which had been disposed of in the Court of first instance upon points which were not preliminary points, but points directed to the merits of the case, the High Court on appeal set aside the remand order, directing the lower Appellate Court to hear the appeal according to law. ABRAHIM KHAN v. 153.—Civil Procedure Code, s. 566—Power of High Court in second appeal.—A revenue-paying talukh was sold for arrears of dāk cess under the Public Demands Recovery Act. The sale was set aside on appeal by the Revenue Commissioner, but on an application for review made to his successor, the sale was confirmed, and the purchaser took possession. In a suit to recover possession of an 8 annas share of the talukh on the grounds, among others, that the order on review was passed without jurisdiction and without notice to the plaintiffs, and as such conferred no title on the purchaser, the District Judge, on appeal, held that the order on review, not having been set aside, remained in force, but he remanded the case under s. 566 for trial of the question of notice. On the case coming back to the Appellate Court before another Judge, he held the order on review to be ultra vires, and the trial of the question of notice to be unnecessary. The defendants preferred a second appeal against the last judgment. Held that on the hearing of the appeal the entire case, including the order of remand, was open to consideration, and that the High Court had power to determine whether that order or the order subsequently passed was correct on the merits. LALA PRYAG LAL v. 24. ----- Suit for rent of lands appertenant to dwelling-house.—The defendant had been declared entitled, under s. 9, Bengal Regulation XIX of 1814, to hold certain lands as attached to his dwelling-house, at an equitable rent payable to the landlord. 28. Garden land where trees are removed, Suit to fix rent of—Act X of 1859, s. 23, cl. 1.—Where land has been held as a bagh, and no other right or interest therein is shown, it becomes ordinarily, on removal of the trees, a portion of the malguzari land of the village, and the occupant who brings it under cultivation is liable to the payment of rent. If the landowner and himself cannot by agreement fix the rent, a suit for the determination of the rate was maintainable under cl. 1, s. 23 of Act X of 1859. But where the occupant who brings the bagh under cultivation sets up a right inconsistent with the existence of the relation of landlord and tenant, and there is a contest between the parties as to their respective rights and positions, the clause was inapplicable. *SHROFAL SINGH v. 34. Beng. Act VIII of 1869—Suit for dustoorat—Objection on appeal.—A suit for dustoorat is not a suit for rent, and is therefore not cognizable under Bengal Act VIII of 1869. The ground that, even supposing the suit was not a suit for rent, it was not liable to be dismissed in order that a fresh suit might be instituted under Act VIII of 1859, not having been taken in the Court below, nor in the grounds of special appeal, was overruled at the hearing of the special appeal. RAM-CHURN BANERJEE v. Minto, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 426, considered and approved. SHALGRAM v. KUBIRUN [3 B. L. R., A. C., 61: 11 W. R., 400]

36. Suit to recover payment for use of land for stacking timber.—In a suit to recover money due, or payment in kind, for the use of the plaintiff's land by stacking timber thereon and keeping it there for a specified time,—Held that the claim was of the nature of one for rent and governed by the law of limitation applicable to money claims of that kind. Where there are well-known terms upon which the use of land for stacking timber is permitted by its owner, and a party with the knowledge of this custom or practice uses the land in this way, he is bound as by an implied agreement to pay accordingly for such use. JUMNA DOSS v. GAWBER MEAH . . . 21 W. R., 124

37. Usufructuary mortgage—Huqajiri—Reserved rent.—The plaintiff had borrowed money on security of a zur-i-peahgi lease of property which, after some years, he sued to redeem by payment of an alleged balance, claiming credit for huqajiri of the hypothecated land owing to him for the intervening period. Held that huqajiri is not rent (see Hyder Buksh v. Hossein Buksh, 4 W. R., 103), and if it were, it was not claimed as such in this case; moreover, there being a rent reserved would not alter the essential character of the arrangement, which was one of usufructuary mortgage. Held that the words of s. 25, Act X of 1853, imply that a suit by a zamindar to recover a rent reserved on land which has been let out on a zur-i-peahgi lease should be brought in a Civil Court. Held also that the plaintiff was justified in bringing his suit in a Court where he could obtain substantial relief, although the remedy sought by him involved in its details different jurisdictions. SHAO GOLAM SINGH v. ROY DINKUR DYAL . . . 12 W. R., 215

38. Deposit as security for rent—Huq-i-zamindari.—The fact that a sum of money was deposited by the lessee with the lessor as security for the payment of the rent did not remove a suit for rent from the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts. A claim for huq-i-zamindari was not cognizable under Act X of 1859. JOWAHUR LALL v. SUKTAN ALI . . . 12 W. R., 214

39. Suit for zamindari ddk charges.—A suit by a zamindar against a patnidar for zamindari ddk charges, under Bengal Act VIII of 1862, for which the latter is liable under his kabuliât, was not cognizable under Act X of 1859. RUTTUNMONEE DOSSER v. JOYENDROMOHUN TAGORE [6 W. R., Act X, 31]

Nuzzerana.—A certain sum was paid to Government as nuzzerana during the existence of the maafee grant through a lambardar. After the maafee was resumed and a Government jumma assessed upon it, the nuzzerana continued to be paid until the interest of the holder of the resumed maafee was confiscated for rebellion and sold at auction. After the confiscation, the Government allowed the amount to the lambardar by deducting it from the amount of Government revenue paid by him. Held that, under the circumstances, the payment of nuzzerana being a present in acknowledgment of proprietary title in the nature of a rent-charge, the suit was cognizable under cl. (4), s. 1, Act XIV of 1863. ZAHOR HOSSAIN v. ASSUD ALI 2 Agra, Pt. II, 178

46. Suit for rent of land covered by buildings.—L having claimed certain lands as lessee from the zamindar, and A having pleaded that he held them under a mirasi tenure from the same zamindar, the Court held that the two leases could co-exist, and that L was entitled to recover actual possession and to pay to A, as an intermediate holder, the rent due to the zamindar. In execution of the decree, L was put in possession of all the land except a portion covered by factory buildings in the possession of A, which buildings the Court held did not go with the land. Unable to get possession, L brought a suit to recover rent for the land covered by the building. Held that no suit for rent could lie, A's representative being a trespasser, and his mere statement of willingness to pay rent being insufficient to constitute the relation of landlord and tenant. LYONS v. As plaintiff did not get possession of his share until after the expiry of the sub-lease, and then only by the aid of the Civil Court, and as his title during the subsistence of the lease was merely nominal, and as he exercised no rights of a landlord during this period, and could not have sustained against the dar-ijaradar an action for rent under Act X of 1859,—Held that his suit was properly brought in the Civil Court. RADHAJEEBUN MUSTAFEE v. Held also (by PHAR, J.) that whatever might have been the case before the intervention, as soon as the intervenor was made a defendant, and issues of right and title were raised by the Court between him and the plaintiff, there was matter which the Court had jurisdiction to decide. of, the land. Held that the plaintiff's title was bad, on the ground that the decree did not purport to bind the surety for the payment of the money awarded, and on the ground that a Revenue Court is not competent to entertain a suit against a person who has become surety for payment of rent. BHUGWAN CHUNDER ROY CHOWDHURI v. 89. — Suit for arrears of rent—Benami lease—Landlord and tenant—Act X of 1859.—A brought a suit in the Collector's Court against B, C, D, and E for arrears of rent in respect of land demised under a pottah to F. He joined G and H as defendants. According to the terms of the pottah, they were sureties for F. It was admitted that F's name was used benami in the pottah, and that he took no interest. A sued B, C, D, and E as the parties interested and in possession. C objected that a new settlement had been made and a new pottah granted; that he held a moiety only of the lands, and was not liable for more; and that D was his raiyat, and ought not therefore to have been made a defendant. D and E contended that they were liable in respect of the lot comprised under the pottah, and had already paid rent for it to A under a decree, but objected that they ought to have been sued separately from B, and B did not appear. The lower Court held that C had failed to make out his case, and that D and E were liable in this suit, and passed a decree ordering them to pay the amount admitted by them to be due from them, and the other defendants to pay the remainder of the claim. C appealed. On the appeal, PRACOOK, C.J. (MITTER, J., contra), held that the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed, the lease being to H and not to the defendants; that the Court below had founded its decision on matters extraneous to the lease, which it had no jurisdiction to inquire into. Held per MITTER, J., that the suit was properly brought against the actual tenants and not against the benamidar, and that the Collector had jurisdiction. Held by both Judges that the suit should be dismissed as against the sureties, who could not as such be sued under Act X of 1859. ROY PRIYANATH CHOWDHRY v. S. C. PREONATH CHOWDHRY v. BEEPIN BEHAREE CHUCKERBUTTY 11 W. R., 120

C appealed under s. 15 of the Letters Patent. Held by KEMP and JACKSON, JJ., that the Collector had full jurisdiction to entertain the suit, which was properly brought against those who were in the actual possession of the land, and that these persons were really the tenants; that the form of the decree passed by the Collector was correct, the plaintiff having consented to the decree being given in that form; that the sureties had really made themselves responsible for those who were really interested under the lease, and not for F. PROSONNO COOMAR PAL CHOWDRU v. KOYLASH CHUNDER PAL CHOWDRY, B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 759, distinguished. Held by NORMAN, J. (dissenting), that the terms of the lease under which F was alone interested could not be contradicted by oral evidence; that F alone was bound to the lessor under the lease; that the defendant could not be sued as tenant, unless subsequent to the pottah and kabuliati something had occurred creating the relation of landlord and tenant between them and the lessor; that no such relation or any contract creating such relation between the parties could be implied from the circumstances of the case, and the suit should be dismissed. The Revenue Court had therefore no jurisdiction. But whether in the Revenue or Civil Court, D and E could not be sued jointly with B and C, nor could G and H. HIPINBEHARI CHOWDRY v. RAM CHANDRA ROY . 5 B. L. R., 234; 14 W. R., 12

90. — Suit for arrears of rent—Question relating to rent.—In execution of a decree of the Revenue Court in a suit brought by K for arrears of rent of a certain patni, the patni was put up for sale and purchased in the name of G. The rent having again fallen into arrear, K took proceedings against G, under Regulation VIII of 1819, for the sale of the patni; but the arrears having been paid, the patni was not sold. In a suit for arrears of rent of the same patni subsequently brought by K against G, P, and B (the wife of P) jointly, on the allegation that the patni had been purchased by G benami for P and B,—Held that the Collector had no jurisdiction to try questions relating to rent depending upon equitable rights and liabilities arising from circumstances other than those of the relationship of landlord and tenant. PROSONNO COOMAR PAL CHOWDRY v. 92. — Suit for arrears of rent—Title.—A died, leaving four sons, B, C, D, and E, by a wife deceased, and a widow, K, and three other sons, F, G, and H, by her. K brought a suit against B, C, D, and E, and against her three sons, F, G, and H, to establish her title to a certain talukh which she alleged had been conveyed to her by A under a deed of gift. B, C, D, and E set up a prior deed of partition, whereby the property of the deceased, including this talukh, was divided between all his sons in the proportion of ten annas to B, C, D, and E, and six annas to F, G, and H. The High Court, on appeal, held that the deed of partition was genuine, and rendered the subsequent deed of gift inoperative. Afterwards B, C, D, and E instituted a suit in the Collector's Court for arrears of rent in respect of another talukh, also included in the deed of partition, against the raiyats and F, G, and H. The raiyats admitted that they held at the rent claimed, but stated that they had not paid their rent on account of a dispute between the brothers as to the shares in which they were entitled to the same. F, G, and H raised the defence that this suit could not be maintained in the Collector's Court: a suit in the Civil Court should be brought for the determination of their shares, and the decision in their prior suit was no evidence against them. Held that the question was really one of title between the brothers, and such suit could not be maintained in the Revenue Courts. *GIRISH CHANDRA ROY CHOWDERY v. The Judge on appeal reversed the decision and gave plaintiff a decree. Held that, even if the Judge had gone simply into the question of title and decided whether the estate was joint or separate, and on that decision based a decree, he would not have been wrong. *MOHESH DUTT v. 12. — Sale in execution of decrees against estate of deceased—Suit against representatives of deceased husband's estate.—In 1862 a suit for mesne profits was brought against certain persons as being the heirs of one R L, deceased, among whom were his widow and two infant sons. During the pendency of this suit the two infant sons died, and the widow was made a defendant as representing the estate of her deceased sons. The suit was decreed in favour of the plaintiffs in 1875; and on the plaintiffs applying for execution, the widow objected that five-sixteenths of the properties, against which execution was sought, was the property of her adopted son, whom she alleged to have adopted in 1874. The adopted son was not made a party to the suit. This objection was overruled, but the same objection was taken by the adopted son through his natural father as his guardian and next friend, and the Court released the five-sixteenth share from attachment, and allowed the objection. Against this order some of the plaintiffs appealed, but pending the appeal another of the plaintiffs applied to the High Court under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the order set aside. The Court, whilst refusing to interfere with the order, inasmuch as there appeared to be no material irregularity therein, pointed out to the lower Court that the decree of 1875 having been obtained on account of a debt of R L's, and being against the widow as representing her husband's (R L's) estate, the estate would be answerable for the debt, whether the widow or the adopted son represented the estate, supposing the decree to have been properly obtained. The principle in Isham Chunder Mitter v. Bakesh Ali Sondagar, Marsh., 614, followed. SOTISH CHUNDER LAHIREY v. NILOOMUL LAHIREY

13. — Sale in execution of decree against deceased Mahomedan's estate—Representation of deceased by some only of his next-of-kin—Civil Procedure Code, s. 284—Sale held to be valid.—V, a Mahomedan woman, died leaving her husband and several minor children as her representatives. In execution of a money-decree obtained against V, the creditor attached certain land which belonged to V and made her husband and two of her children parties to the execution proceedings. The land was sold and purchased by the decree-holder. Held, in a suit brought by the children of V to set aside the sale on the ground, inter alia, that some of them were no parties to the proceedings in execution, and that the others, being minors at the time, had not been represented by a guardian appointed by the Court, that the sale was valid. KUNHAMMAD v. 17. ——— Suit against legal representative—Assets—Decree—Execution—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 252.—A plaintiff is entitled to sue the legal representative of his deceased debtor, and to obtain a decree against him, without proving that assets have come into his hands. AMBER-OMNISSA . . . 15 W. R., 285

20. ——— Denial of assets—Decree against estate—Costs.—In a suit brought against the representatives of a deceased Mahomedan, alleged to be in possession of his estate for recovery of the amounts of a bond-debt due by the deceased, the plaintiff should first be allowed to establish his right of suit against the estate, although the defendants plead that they possess no property belonging to the deceased to satisfy the claim. Such a plea, if established, is one to be regarded in framing the decree. The decree in such a case should be for payment out of the property of the deceased. And ordinarily the Court should not direct payment of the costs by the defendants personally, but out of the estate. MADHO RAM v. DILBEUR MAHUL . . . 2 N. W., 449

21. ——— Person in possession of estate without assets—Act VIII of 1859, s. 203.—The plaintiff sued the defendants on the ground that they were in possession of his deceased debtor's property. It being found that the defendants received no assets from the deceased, —Held the suit was rightly dismissed. If the suit had simply been against the defendants as heirs or personal representatives of the deceased, and if they had alleged that no assets had come to their hands, the plaintiff would have been entitled to a decree against them as representatives of the deceased (if he had prayed for such a decree), without going to a trial on the question whether or not the defendants had assets; and in that case he might have proceeded, in enforcement of his decree, under the provisions of s. 203, Act VIII of 1859. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF HIRALLAL MOOKERJEE was entitled to a decree for payment by the defendants of the amount of the bond out of any property which passed to them as the representatives of their father; the plaintiff, in execution of the decree, being at liberty to proceed in respect of the immoveable property, if there should be no moveable property left, or if it should prove insufficient when sold to satisfy the decree. RAYAPPA CHETTI v. ALI SAHIB [2 Mad., 336]

24. ———— Execution of decrees against son—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 208—Issues.—Where the defendant in a suit for the payment of money died before decree, his sons were made parties and a decree for the debt due by the deceased was given against them. In execution of this decree, the decree-holder attached certain property in the hands of one of the sons, who objected on the ground that it was his self-acquired property. Held that the proper issues to be determined were (1) whether the property attached by the decree-holder had formed a part of the estate of the deceased debtor; and if not, (2) whether if it was separate property of the son, that son had misapplied any property received by him from his father, and, if so, to what extent. MOORAREE SINGH v. PURYAG SINGH [2 C. L. R., 189]

25. ———— Responsibility of representative—Rights of creditors.—When a defendant against whom a decree was passed in his representative capacity has made payments in satisfaction of the decree to the full value of the property of the deceased which has come, or but for the default of the defendant might have come, to his hands, the decree can no longer be executed, even although the decree-holder may be able to prove that the defendant still has in his possession property which originally belonged to the deceased. If the heir of a deceased Hindu or Mahomedan has sold to a bona fide purchaser property which he has inherited, he is responsible for the assets received, but the property cannot be followed in the hands of the purchaser. RAM GOLAM DOBBY v. AYMA BEGUM [12 W. R., 177]

26. ———— Liability of representatives—Onus probandi—Mode of accounting.—Before judgment-debtors can claim exemption from a decree-holder's claim, on the ground that they only received a small sum from their ancestor's estate, or that what they have received has been paid in satisfaction of their ancestor's debts, they should prove and file an inventory of the whole estate descended to them, and prove how it has been applied. In a claim of this kind, the onus of proof is on the judgment-debtors, and, on their failure to sustain it, a presumption arises in favour of the decree-holder. *JOOGUL KISHORE SINGH v. the obligor refused to pay the subsequent interest to the plaintiff. Held that, as the plaintiff had failed to take out a certificate of succession to the obligee, the obligor was justified in such refusal. Held also that the plaintiff could not recover the stamp penalty from the obligor. *GARUDA REDDI v. 28. ———— Payment of debts to heir of deceased without certificate—Certificate subsequently granted—Liability of debtor—Bom. Reg. VIII of 1827.—A defendant who is sued by the holder of a certificate of heirship to a deceased Hindu for a debt due from the defendant to the deceased is at liberty to show, notwithstanding the certificate of heirship, that he has paid the debt he owed the deceased to the actual heir of the latter before the grant of the certificate of heirship. It will not, however, be sufficient for such defendant to show that he has paid his debt to a person whom he bona fide believed to be such heir. *PURSHOTAM MANSUKH v. 29. ———— Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 187—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), s. 2—Estate of deceased Hindu—Legal representative—Right of suit.—A Hindu, who was of one of the defendants in a suit, died leaving a will. The executors appointed by the will did not take out probate; and the property of the deceased came into the possession of his divided brothers, who were thereupon brought on to the record of the suit as the representatives of the deceased defendant. A decree was passed for the plaintiff by consent. The mother of the deceased, who would, apart from the will, have been his legal representative, then sued to set aside the above decree, having previously obtained a declaration that she was entitled to the property of the deceased in the suit against his brothers above referred to. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain the suit. JANAKI v. DHANU LALL I. L. R., 14 Mad., 454

30. ———— Certificate under Act XXVII of 1860—Suit to set aside certificate granted by the Resident at Cochin—Jurisdiction of Foreign Court—Right of suit.—Defendant 1, who was domiciled in the Native State of Cochin, obtained from the Resident a certificate to collect the debts of the deceased karnavan of the plaintiff's tarwad. The plaintiff, whose domicile was the same as that of defendant 1, then sued in British Cochin for a declaration of his right to receive the interest accrued due on certain Government promissory notes, being the property of his deceased karnavan. Held that the suit did not lie, and that the appellant should either have established his representative right by suit in the Court of Native Cochin and then applied to the Resident for a certificate or have brought his action against the Government of India, joining defendant 1 as a party to such action. *AMMUNNI v. 31. — Decree for maintenance obtained by wife against her husband—Appeal by husband against decree—Death of wife pending appeal—Legal representative of the deceased for the purpose of the appeal.—A Hindu wife obtained a decree against her husband for maintenance. He appealed, and while the appeal was pending, the wife died leaving two daughters. The question then arose whether her husband or his daughters should represent the deceased in the appeal. Held that the daughters of the deceased were the legal representatives for the purposes of the appeal. MANILAL RAWDAT v. 32. — Representative of insolvent debtor—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 252—Suit against widow of insolvent as his legal representative.—The husband of the defendant was adjudicated an insolvent in 1891, and the usual order was made vesting his estate in the Official Assignee. He subsequently died without having filed his schedule, and no schedule had ever been filed. After his death, a suit was brought by a creditor against the defendant as the "widow, heiress, and legal representative" of the deceased insolvent, in which suit a decree was made against her, "the amount to be belied out of the assets of the deceased in her hands." In an application by the defendant to have the decree set aside on the grounds that the Official Assignee was a necessary party to the suit, and that the decree should have been against him as her husband's representative, as his estate was in his lifetime, and since had continued to be, vested in the Official Assignee,—Held that on the death of the insolvent his widow, the defendant, became his legal representative within the meaning of s. 252 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the existence of the vesting order in no way affected her position as such representative. Greenader Chunder Ghose v. Mackintosh, I. L. R., 4 Cal., 897; Girdharlal v. Bai Shiv, I. L. R., 8 Bom., 809; and Kashi Prasad v. Miller, I. L. R., 7 All., 752, referred to. CHANDMULL v. BANKESCONDERY DOSSEE . . . 33. — Death of plaintiff subsequent to decree—Right of survivorship vested in defendant—Effect on vested right of plaintiff's representative.—A decree for partition operates as a severance of the joint ownership. Where therefore M, a minor and only son, by his next friend sued his father and certain alienees of the family property for partition and obtained a decree, and subsequent to decree and pending appeal the plaintiff died, and M's mother was brought on the record as deceased plaintiff's legal representative,—Held that any right of survivorship which the defendant might have had, if the plaintiff had died before decree, was extinguished, and did not affect the rights of his mother, who properly represented him. SUBBAYYA MUDALI v. death—Minor sons represented by their mother and guardian on record—Purchase of judgment-debtor's interest by decree-holder—Subsequent suit by sons to recover the property—Civil Procedure Code (1859), s. 210—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 234.—Under s. 210 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), an execution sale of the property of a deceased judgment-debtor was binding, if the estate of the deceased was sufficiently represented quoad such property. A Hindu judgment-debtor died, leaving a widow and two sons, who were minors. His widow was placed on the record as his heir, and not his sons. Certain property of the deceased was sold in execution. The sale certificate issued to the purchaser stated that he had purchased the right, title, and interest of the judgment debtor in the property. In a suit subsequently brought by the sons,—Held that they were bound by the sale. The widow of the deceased judgment-debtor, who as natural guardian of the minor sons was in possession of the property, was upon the record, and it was clear that it was the interest of the judgment-debtor, and not that of the widow, that was intended to be sold. ABHUT RAMCHANDRA PAL v. 7. ———— Power of Courts—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 329.—The power given by s. 329 of the Civil Procedure Code to make such order as the Court shall see fit must be construed with regard to the circumstances in respect of which the power is to be exercised. An order under s. 329 should be the result of the fact that the defendant in the suit, who is precluded by the decree from disputing plaintiff's right, unjustly instigates a third party, who has no real interest in the property, to prevent the plaintiff from getting the benefit of his execution. A Court has no power under this section to determine, as between the judgment-creditor and a third party obstructing the execution of the decree, important questions on the merits which are wholly unconnected with, and cannot be affected by, the fact that the obstruction is made at the instigation of the defendant. GOVINDA NAIR v. The case was tried, on remand from the Judge, as a suit under the provisions of a 229 of Act VIII of 1859. Held per JACKSON, J., that as the decree-holder had not complained that the officer of the Court had been obstructed or resisted by the claimant, the case did not fall within s. 229 of Act VIII of 1859; and therefore the Court had not jurisdiction to take summary cognizance of the case. BUNAL SING CHOWDHRY v. The Court rejected such application on the ground that it had been made after the time limited by law. Held that the order rejecting such application could not be regarded as one under s. 229 of Act VIII of 1859, which would under s. 231 preclude such decree-holder from instituting a suit against such person for such land. BENI PRASAD v. D having resisted the execution of the decree, the plaintiff's claim was numbered and registered as a suit under s. 229 of Act VIII of 1859. Upon investigation, the first class Subordinate Judge made an order staying execution of the decree. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, who held that no appeal lay to him, as the subject-matter of the original suit, out of which the execution suit arose, exceeded Rs. 5,000. The plaintiff appealed against this decision to the High Court. Held that the investigation of a claim under s. 229 of Act VIII of 1859 was not to be regarded as a fresh suit, but was merely a continuation of the original suit, and that there was therefore no appeal against the order in question to the District Judge. RAYLOJI TAMAJI v. 19. — Civil Procedure Code, ss. 13, 278, 331—Munsif, Jurisdiction of.—The plaintiff, having obtained a decree for possession of certain land, applied for execution by delivery of possession, whereupon a third party filed an objection in the Court of the Munsif that he held a prior decree for possession of the same land, and therefore the plaintiff's decree was incapable of execution. This objection was allowed, and the plaintiff then sued for establishment of his right to possession of the land jointly with the objector, making the former judgment-debtor and the objector defendants to the suit. The Subordinate Judge in first appeal held that the Munsif had acted under s. 331 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, applying s. 13 of the same Code, dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff then appealed. Held that circumstances did not exist to give the Munsif jurisdiction to act under s. 331, and that his order must be taken to have been made, as it purported to have been made, under s. 278. Bahal Singh Chowdhry v. The decree-holder presented a petition to the Court under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 328: this petition was rejected, and the claim was not numbered and registered as a suit. Held that the decree for partition was a decree for possession of property within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code, s. 328; and that that section was not rendered inapplicable by the fact that the obstructor claimed to be a mulgeni tenant. GOPALA v. The sale was confirmed and a writ of possession directed. After the decree, but prior to attachment, the original judgment-debtor had executed and registered a patni pottah for a three annas share of one of the zamindaris in dispute, and granted it to D, who having objected under s. 246, Civil Procedure Code, 1859, to the above sale, an order was made at the time of the auction sale that it should be proclaimed that D claimed a patni right, and this was accordingly done. Before M was put into actual possession, she was required to find security. Delaying to do this, the lands were attached and sold under a judgment obtained by others who purchased and entered into possession. M, having furnished security, petitioned to be put into possession, but her petition was rejected. She then brought a suit to cancel the order refusing her possession. In her plaint she claimed khas possession, but did not refer to the patni claimed by D. Her plaint was decreed, the decree was appealed, and it was finally upheld by the Privy Council; but throughout the litigation no issue was raised as to the patni. In the proceeding to execute the decree M claimed actual possession. Before process had been issued, D objected to khas possession being given of his patni mousah. The Judge ruled that the objection fell within the spirit of s. 269, Act VIII of 1859, and that he had therefore jurisdiction to entertain it. Held that s. 269 did not apply, inasmuch as no attempt had been made to deliver possession. Held also that the only intention of the decree was to confirm the plaintiff in the position which she occupied when the property was sold in execution of her original decree, after proclamation of D's claim, and that she was not entitled to khas possession. SHARODA PERSHAD MULLICK v. RESISTANCE OR OBSTRUCTION TO EXECUTION OF DECREE—continued.

48. ——— Person dispossessed in execution of decree—His remedy by suit or application under s. 332 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882).—A person, dispossessed of his land in execution of a decree of a Civil Court against a third party, should proceed for the alleged obstruction of his possession, not by a suit in the Mamlatdar's Court, but by an application under s. 332 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), or by a regular suit. *GULABHAI GOPALJI v. It was open to him to proceed at once by regular suit against the person in possession of the property purchased by him. MADAREE v. BULLOO KOORREE. 2 N. W., 450

The Court made an investigation under s. 269, and determined that, as applicant's claim had been disallowed under s. 246, he had no right to remain in possession. Held that this order was judicious and proper. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BANKEEMADHUB ROY. [13 W. It was otherwise where his right was consistent with the order and the possession given under it. RANGO VITHAL v. BIKHIVADAS BIN RAYACHAND. 11 Bom., 174

54. ——— Order not made against parties to proceedings—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 268, 269.—A purchaser of immovable property at a Court-sale, having been obstructed by the defendant, made an application to the Court under s. 268 of Act VIII of 1859 for the removal of the obstruction, but subsequently withdrew his application. The Court thereupon made an endorsement on the application to the effect that, as the applicant did not wish to proceed further, no investigation was made. Held that no such order had been made as was contemplated by s. 269, that section contemplating at least an order against one party or the other. *BHIKA v. a case governed by the Civil Procedure Code, 1877, it was held that, there being no provision in that Code similar to that contained in s. 269 of Act VIII of 1859 enabling the Court to do so, the Court could not enquire into a complaint made by a person other than the defendant on the ground of dispossession in the delivery of possession to the purchaser of immovable property sold in execution of a decree; and therefore the only remedy of a person so dispossessed was by regular suit. This omission in the Code of 1877 was rectified by the amending Act XII of 1879, and under the present Code, Act XIV of 1882, a person other than the defendant may make an application for an inquiry.

The claim was rejected. No suit was brought by M to contest this order. S purchased the said land and house in execution and obtained a sale-certificate. In 1884 S sued M to recover possession of the land and house, alleging that in execution proceedings in 1882 he had been put into possession of the land, but not of the house, which was found locked up by the Court Ameen, and that M prevented him from enjoying both the land and house. M pleaded that S had never been put into possession, and again set up his title as purchaser from R and possession under such title. The Munsif found that S had been put into formal or constructive possession of the land, but not of the house, and decreed the claim. On appeal, the District Judge held that S was bound to proceed according to the provisions of s. 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure to recover possession, and could not bring a separate suit. Held that, whether there had been legal delivery or not, the suit was not barred. *SEVU v. In execution of the decree, the property was sold and purchased by L, who was put in possession by the Court. G, one of the managers, then applied for possession under s. 335 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), alleging that he had been wrongfully dispossessed. Held that the mortgagee got no title to the property by his mortgage from A against the real owner K; and G, who was in actual possession as his manager (whether or not there were others equally entitled to share in the management), was entitled to prevent the purchaser L taking possession, and having been dispossessed had a claim to be restored to possession under s. 335 of the Civil Procedure Code. *GOBIND BALVANT SHIVNEKAR v. A usufructuary mortgagee of the property who had been a party to the suit, and in whose favour the decree was, in so far that it declared his right to continue in possession, applied to be restored to possession, and obtained an order in his favour. Thereupon the assignee, auction-purchaser, applied in revision to have the order restoring the usufructuary mortgagee to possession set aside. Held that the order in question was an order which could properly be made under s. 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, being unappealable, an application for revision thereof might lie. The auction-purchaser, though he happened also to be the assignee of the decree, was not a representative of a party to the suit within the meaning of s. 244, nor was the usufructuary mortgagee a judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 334 or s. 335, but he was a person other than a judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 335. *SABHAJIT v. resistance or obstruction—Fresh cause of action.—The period of limitation provided for in s. 328 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a limitation which governs a cause of action arising out of a particular resistance or obstruction. So far as that resistance or obstruction is concerned, the decree-holder, if he wishes to take proceedings under s. 328, must do so within one month from the time of such resistance or obstruction. 4. ——— Rule as to estoppel by judgment—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 2.—The doctrine laid down in the Duchess of Kingston's case, 2 Smith's L. But the Judicial Committee, reversing the decision of the Court below, considered that the doctrine had no application in the present case, the judgment relied on not being the judgment of a Court of concurrent jurisdiction directly upon the point upon the same matter; and, after an examination of the whole evidence, restored the judgment of the first Court. *KHUGOWLEE SING v. (MITTER, J., dissenting).—A former judgment, which is not a judgment in rem, nor one relating to matters of a public nature, is not admissible in evidence in a subsequent suit, either as a res judicata, or as proof of the particular point which it decides, unless between the same parties or those claiming under them. In a suit between A and B the question was whether C or D was the heir of H. If C was the heir of H, then A was entitled to succeed; otherwise not. The same question had been raised in a former suit brought by X against A and decided against A: and this former judgment was admitted in evidence in the suit between A and B, and dealt with by the Courts below as conclusive evidence against A upon the point so decided. Held (MITTER, J., dissenting) that the former judgment was not admissible as evidence in the suit between A and B either as "a transaction" under s. 13, or as "a fact" under s. 11, or under any other section of the Evidence Act. GUJJU LALL v. FATEH LALL [I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171; 6 C. L. R., 439]

Where the parties are the same, or representatives of those in the former suit, such judgments and decrees may be evidence so nearly conclusive as, when produced by the party in whose favour they are, to shift the burden of proof from him to his opponent. Semble—Under s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), the law is now the same as it was under Act VIII of 1859, prior to the passing of the Evidence Act. 7. ———— Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 11 and 13—Admissibility in evidence of judgment in former case—The subject-matter of the former suit not being identical with that of the latter suit.—The rule laid down in the cases of Gujju Lall v. 9. ———— Suit for arrears of rent—Onus probandi.—In a suit for arrears of rent of a half-share of land, the plaintiffs relied upon an ex-parte decree for rent at a certain rate, which they had obtained in 1869 against the tenants of this share. The defendants relied upon a subsequent decree in a contested suit by the plaintiffs against the tenants of the other half share, in which a lower rate of rent had been given. No other evidence than the decrees was produced on either side. It did not appear whether the ex-parte decree had ever been executed. Held that it was open to the defendants to dispute the rate of rent claimed, and that the plaintiffs were bound to prove that they were entitled to recover it. 11. ———— Decrees in rent suits—Suit for arrears of rent—Subsequent suit for enhancement.—The plaintiff sued the defendant in the year 1873 for arrears of rent at a certain rate per bigha. The defendant pleaded that the land had been held by him at a uniform rent for more than twenty years, and this contention was supported by the Court. The plaintiff then gave the defendant notice of enhancement, and sued to recover rent for two years at the rate stated by the defendant, and for one year at an increased rate. To this suit the defendant raised substantially the same defence. Held that the decision in the previous suit was not a bar to the present suit, there being two questions for consideration: one, whether there had been a uniform payment of rent for twenty years; and if so, whether the presumptions which the law directs to be drawn from a uniform payment of rent for twenty years had been rebutted by the plaintiff; neither of which

17. ————— Decision as to amount of rent—Subsequent suit for abatement of rent.—The plaintiff obtained a patni lease of certain villages from the defendant in 1861 at an annual rent, and in 1865 was evicted from a portion of the property. She took no steps to obtain an abatement; but inasmuch as she did not pay any rent for the year 1871, the defendant brought a suit against her for the rent of that year. The plaintiff set up the defence that she was entitled to an abatement of Rs155 from her rent, the Rs155 representing the annual value of the property which she had lost in consequence of the eviction. In that suit it was decided that the amount of abatement she was entitled to was Rs42. No appeal was made against that decision. In a suit brought by the plaintiff for the purpose of obtaining a permanent abatement of her rent she claimed the precise measure of abatement, viz., Rs155, which she had claimed in the suit brought against her by the defendant. Held that the question was res judicata, it having been raised and decided in the former suit. NORO DOORGA DOSSER v. by the plaintiff. In a later suit the plaintiff sued the defendant in respect of the same holding for the rent of a subsequent year, and he claimed at the same rate as he had claimed in the previous suit. Held (MITTAR, J., dissenting) that the decree in the former suit was res judicata as to the proper rent payable by the defendant. *Pannoo Singh v. The defendants denied being in possession as alleged. Another co-sharer in the same estate had previously brought a suit against the same defendants for the rent of the same tenures, and in that suit the present plaintiffs and other co-sharers of the estate were made co-defendants, and the decision in that suit was that the present defendants were in possession and were liable to pay to the then plaintiff his share of the rent. Held (MITTAR, J., dissenting) that the decree in the former suit was not a res judicata or even admissible as evidence in the present suit. *SURENDER NATH PAL CHOWDHRY v. In a suit arising out of an alleged trespass to the same drain brought by A against B, in which A stated it was his property, the judgment of the Munsif in the former suit was tendered in evidence on behalf of the plaintiff, and it was contended it was an estoppel. The Court admitted it in evidence, but doubted whether it would be an estoppel. MAHOMED SHAHABOODEEN v. WEDGEHERRY

In 1823 the then shebait of the debasheba of K instituted a suit for the recovery of the alienated lands against the then shebait of the sheba at C, and in that suit it was declared that the sheba was independent of the debasheba, and thus the plaintiff was referred to a regular suit. dismissing a claim for maintenance preferred by such younger brother against their father in his lifetime, founded on an ikrarnama, did not afford a defence under s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held also that the brothers having made an agreement fixing the allowance for maintenance at a certain sum, the younger brother agreeing to receive a less sum for a defined period, he could only obtain a decree for the allowance so reduced. AHMAD HOSSEIN KHAN v. 30. ——— Decree awarding fixed money allowance in lieu of maintenance—Subsequent suit for partition.—A former decree decided that the plaintiff (a widow) always received a certain fixed amount, and was not entitled to recover more in the shape of profits in respect of the share claimed. Held that it was not a decision that such fixed payment represented a mere claim to maintenance, and not a substantial right or interest in the property itself, so that on partition she must be regarded as having no claim to share in the land. It should be inquired into (the decree being so construed) whether the acceptance of a fixed payment was on forfeiture of all rights to the property, and whether it extended only so far as the widow's right is concerned, or whether it affected the son's right likewise. MAN KOONWER v. brother leaving a widow and daughters, the widow obtained possession of the villages which formed her husband's share, and a suit brought against her by the other brother to recover them was dismissed on the ground that the divided shares descended according to law. The widow then transferred the villages to her elder daughter, whose right to the possession, as against the brother, was declared in the present suit on the ground that, as between the widow and the brother, the question of the widow's title was res judicata. VENKATADRI APPA RAU v. 33. ——— Benami transaction for purpose of defrauding creditors—Deed of conveyance not in real purchaser's name—Collusive suit by nominee against real owner—Decree obtained by fraud—Subsequent suit by real owner against nominee for possession—Right of party to fraud to set fraudulent decree aside—Collusive transaction when held binding and when set aside.—In 1874 the plaintiff P bought a house from G, but caused the conveyance to be executed by G in the defendant C's name. This was done with the object of protecting the property against the claims of the plaintiff's creditors. The plaintiff occupied the house, ostensibly as tenant to the defendant for a nominal rent. In 1880 the defendant brought a suit against the plaintiff to recover possession of the house, and obtained an ex-parte decree. He applied for execution of the decree, but allowed the execution proceedings to drop. In 1883 he made a fresh application for execution. Thereupon the plaintiff filed the present suit for a declaration of his title to the house in question, and of his right to retain possession, alleging that the defendant was a mere benamidar: that the sale-deed and the ex-parte decree were sham and collusive transactions in fraud of the plaintiff's creditors, and that the defendant was merely a trustee for him. Held that the plaintiff was bound by the decree passed in 1880 in the defendant's favour, though it was a collusive decree. The plaintiff could not get the judgment set aside which the defendant had obtained against him by his own contrivance. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant held in trust for him: the object of that trust being to protect the plaintiff's property in fraud of his creditors. Even if such a trust enforceable by the Courts could arise out of such a turpis causa, the question was whether this continued to subsist and would be enforced when the original relations of the parties had become merged in the decree obtained by the defendant against the plaintiff. The general principle is that where a defendant has suffered a judgment to pass against him, the matter is then placed beyond his control. Held also upon the general principle of res judicata that the plaintiff was estopped from raising the question of fraud in the present suit which he might and ought to have urged in the former litigation. CHENVIRAPPA BIN VIRBHADRAPPA v. patni lease, mortgaged the zamindari to the patnidar, who, having afterwards obtained a decree against the zamindar upon the mortgage, attached and purchased, at the sale in execution, the zamindari interest subject to the mortgage. Before that purchase, though after the attachment, another holder of a decree against the zamindar brought the right, title, and interest in the zamindari to sale in execution of his decree, and himself became the purchaser. He then, claiming to have obtained the zamindari estate, sued the patnidar for rent due under the lease. This suit was dismissed, save as to rent due for the time intervening between the two sales in execution, on the ground that the relation of zamindar to leasee had ceased on the purchase by the latter. The present suit was brought by the purchaser from the zamindar stating his title, acquired at the prior of the two sales, and claiming to redeem the mortgage. Held that the dismissal of the rent-suit, which involved the title, barred the present one; and the opinion was expressed that the plaintiff had been rightly adjudged in the rent-suit to be bound by the proceedings taken by the mortgagee, pending which the purchase relied upon had been made. RADHAMADHUB HOLLAR v. 35. ——— Identity of cause of action with that of prior suit, to which the plaintiff in a subsequent suit had been a party—Effect of judgment, that a will had been revoked to bar, between the parties, any claim founded solely on the will.—The widow of a talukhdar, acting under his supposed will, appointed the present appellant to succeed to the talukh and other estate which had belonged to the deceased. The heir of the deceased, under the Oudh Estates' Act I of 1869, obtained the judgment of the Judicial Committee, declaring that he was entitled to the talukhs as against the present appellant whose title was under the will, which had been revoked, as the Committee found. Another suit brought by the present appellant for a decree declaring that, in virtue of his appointment by the widow under the will, he was entitled to the whole of the estate of the deceased, talukhdari and non-talukhdari, was dismissed by the Judicial Committee on the ground that he had no such title to the whole or any part of the estate. Held that this prior judgment was conclusive to bar the present suit, which, being founded entirely upon the appellant's appointment in pursuance of the will, was brought for possession of all the estate of the deceased as well as a declaration of right thereto. Although the heir was not entitled to possession of the estate of the deceased other than talukhdari, inasmuch as the widow took her estate therein, nevertheless, the claim of the present appellant being only founded upon her appointment under the will, as if unrevoked, and not being a claim for property as descending to the

36. ——— and s. 43—Act XII of 1879, s. 6.—The present suit was preceded by others in which the plaintiff sought to establish a right in the same part of the talukhdari estate that he now claimed to redeem from mortgage. The first suit, in which he with another claimed as under-proprietors, was dismissed in 1866 on the ground that they had not shown themselves to have held such right under the talukhdars within the period since 1841. Proceedings not to be regarded as judicial, subsequently taken under Circular 4 of 1867, resulted in a finding that the dismissal was right upon the merits. The property having been transferred to the talukhdar by a conditional sale which had become absolute. Another suit was then brought to recover the talukhdari right under the terms of Circular 106 of 1869, it being alleged that arrears of revenue paid by the talukhdar had been paid on the plaintiff's account. That suit was also dismissed. Held that the present suit to redeem the same property under a mortgage was not barred under s. 18 of Act X of 1877, as amended by s. 6 of Act XII of 1879. AMANAT BIBI v. 37. ——— Clause of conditional sale in mortgage—Suit by mortgagee for declaration of title—Decree ordering delivery of property to mortgagee in default of payment of mortgage-debt by mortgagors within one month—Default of payment by mortgagors—Effect of such default—Mortgaged property taken by mortgagee in execution of such decree not as mortgagee, but absolutely—Subsequent suit for redemption.—In 1863 B and C mortgaged certain land to one G under a mortgage-deed, which provided that, if the mortgage-debt was not paid at the stipulated time, the land should become the absolute property of G, the mortgagee. In 1871 G filed an ejectment suit against B and C and one H alleging that he had become owner of the land by operation of the above clause, and that he had subsequently let it to H, who now, in collusion with the other two defendants (the mortgagors), denied his title. The ejectment suit was subsequently converted into one for a declaration of G's title as owner as against the mortgagors, B and C, who claimed a right to redeem. A decree was passed in 1872 ordering B and C to pay Rs 100 to G within one month, or, in default, to deliver up to him possession of the land. The money was not paid, and V, as purchaser from G, got possession in execution of the above decree in August 1873. In September 1885 the plaintiff, as B's heir and legal representative, filed a suit against G and V to redeem the property. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff's claim was res judicata by virtue of the decree passed in 1872, and that the right to redeem was lost. On appeal, the Court reversed this decision and passed a decree for redemption on payment of Rs100 by the plaintiff within six months. The defendant V then applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction. Held that the plaintiff's claim was res judicata. In the suit brought by G (the mortgagee) in 1871, he had claimed the land as owner through the forfeiture clause in the mortgage-deed, and the mortgagors insisting in that suit on a right still to redeem, the decree plainly meant to give them, by way of indulgence, one month within which to regain the land by payment of Rs100 to G. It renewed the mortgage, but with a condition, which was a material part of the decree. They having failed to pay, the mortgage was extinguished. After the lapse of the month, G could not have recovered the Rs100. Had he sought to recover that money, he would have been met by the terms of the decree. He was entitled to the land, and nothing else. So, too, was V as his vendee. As, then, there was no debt that could be recovered, there was and could be no subsisting mortgage that could be redeemed. VISHNU CHINTAMAN v. BALAJI BIN RAGHUJI

Declaratory decree.—A suit for partition of certain land was withdrawn as against one of the defendants who was entitled to part of the land. The plaintiff and the remaining defendants entered into a compromise in the terms of which the Court passed a decree for delivery of a share of the land to the plaintiff. The decree-holder having died without executing the decree, his heir now sued for partition of the land and delivery of the above share, joining as defendants the various persons entitled to shares. Held that the decree in the former suit could only operate as a declaratory decree, and did not preclude the plaintiff from bringing the present suit. BHIMABAI v. The widow of the testator, who had unsuccessfully opposed the grant in the Court of the North-Western Provinces, then filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Parganas for, amongst other things, the construction of her late husband's will. Held on appeal in such suit that the application for letters of administration was not a suit properly so called, and that the finding on the construction of the will by the Court of the North-Western Provinces, being incidental and for the purpose of determining the question of the representative title of the applicants, could not be regarded as concluding the plaintiff by res judicata from obtaining a construction of the will in the suit brought by her. ABUNMOYI DAS v. executors for probate—Order refusing probate—Subsequent suit by executors as persons entitled under will to property of deceased—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 12, Ch. V, ss. 59 and 88.—The plaintiffs applied to the District Court at Poona under the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) for probate of a will of which they were appointed executors. The defendants opposed their application, and on appeal the High Court rejected it, holding that on the evidence the execution of the will was not proved. The plaintiffs thereupon filed the present suit, as the persons beneficially entitled under the will, for a declaration that the property of the deceased belonged to them, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from obstructing them in the enjoyment of it. The defendant contended that the suit was barred as res judicata. Held that the suit was not barred by the order refusing probate of the will. In a subsequent suit by the reversioner for recovery of possession of the immoveable property so sold, the defence was that the suit was barred as res judicata. He alleged that during the pendency of the suit in which the said decree had been passed, H had agreed that he would not obtain a decree against him, and that, if such a decree were passed, he would not execute it. The lower Appeal Court rejected the plaint, holding (1) that, as between the plaintiff M and the defendant R, the question in issue was res judicata, and (2) that there was no cause of action against the defendant H. RES JUDICATA—continued.

2. ESTOPPEL BY JUDGMENT—continued.

50. ——— Bengal Municipal Act (Beng. Act III of 1864), s. 10—Public highways—Roads vesting in Commissioners—Sub-soil of roads, Right to.—A suit brought by the plaintiffs' predecessor in title to recover certain land from a Municipality (which had been taken up as a public road and vested in the Municipality subsequently under Bengal Act III of 1864, s. 10), on the ground that the plaintiffs had been ousted therefrom by reason of the Municipality stacking stones on a portion thereof, having been dismissed.—Held, that the decision in such suit was not operative as res judicata in another suit brought by the plaintiffs for ejectment and declaration of title to such land against a purchaser of the land from the Municipality. MODHU SUDAN KUNDU v. PROMODA NATH ROY . . . I. L. R., 20 Cal., 732

51. ——— Rent-suit—Evidence—Estoppel—Ex-parte decree, Effect of—Rate of Rent.—A mere statement of an alleged rate of rent in a plaint in a rent-suit in which an ex-parte decree had been obtained is not a statement as to which it must be held that an issue within the meaning of s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure was raised between the parties, so that the defendant is concluded upon it by such decree. Neither a recital in the decree of the rate of rent alleged by the plaintiff, nor a declaration in it as to the rate of rent which the Court considers to have been proved, would operate in such a case so as to make that matter a res judicata, assuming that no such declaration were asked for in the plaint as part of the substantive relief claimed, the defendant having a proper opportunity of meeting the case. MODHUSUDUN SHARA MUNDUL v. BEAR

52. ——— Rent, Suit for—Decree as to rent payable for former year—Rate of rent payable—Decree on admission of defendant.—The plaintiff, in a suit for rent which was contested, having failed to prove that the rent was payable at the rate claimed by him, the Court in trying the issue "what is the amount of the jama," after considering the whole of the evidence and the circumstances of the case, held that the plaintiff had entirely failed to prove his allegation of the jama, and gave him a decree for the amount admitted by the defendant, which was less than that claimed by the plaintiff. In a later suit the plaintiff sued the defendant, in respect of the same holding, for rent for a subsequent year, and he claimed at the same rate as he had claimed in his previous suit. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that the question as to the rate at which the rent was payable was res judicata, it not being alleged that there had been any agreement subsequent to the first suit by which the rate was altered. Held that the question as to the rent payable for the period covered by the first suit was res judicata; but that it did not follow that the decree in that suit operated as res judicata, and conclusively determined the rate of the rent payable for the year in respect of which the subsequent suit was brought. That depended on whether the previous decision was that the plaintiff should recover from the defendant the sum admitted by him to be due, or that the sum so admitted to be due was the proper amount of rent payable for the period in question. Held that in this case the previous decision was to the latter effect, and that the question of the rate at which the rent was payable by the defendant was res judicata. Purnoo Singh v. Nirghin Singh, I. L. R., 7 Cal., 298, and Jeo Lal Singh v. Surjun, 11 C. L. R., 483, referred to. HURRY BEHARI BHAGAT v. PARGUN AHIR . . . I. L. R., 19 Cal., 656

53. ——— Rent, Suit for—Decree as to rent payable for former years—Evidence of rent payable.—The plaintiffs sued the defendants for rent of a certain jote claiming a higher rent than the defendants admitted. The High Court in second appeal gave a decree at the lesser rate admitted by the defendants. Subsequently the plaintiffs again sued the defendants in regard to the same jote for arrears of rent for subsequent years at the rate claimed in the former suit. The defendants contended that the rate of the rent as regards this jote was, by virtue of the judgment of the High Court in the previous suit, res judicata as between themselves and the plaintiff. Held that where in a rent suit a Judge tries the question and gives judgment on the question "what is the yearly rent," and makes that the foundation of his judgment, that decision is res judicata between the parties. The previous judgment of the High Court therefore operated as res judicata. Hurry Behari Bhagat v. Pargun Ahir, I. L. R., 19 Cal., 656, followed. Per NORRIS, J.—Even if the judgment of the High Court did not operate as res judicata, still it was some evidence of the rate of the rent of the previous year. BUKSHI v. 54. ——— Rent, Suit for—Decree as to amount of land—Rent payable for former years—Rate of rent payable.—The plaintiff sued the defendant for rent of certain lands. The defendant contended that he was not liable for the entire rent, as part of the land was in the plaintiff's possession. The defendant failed to prove his contention, and a decree was given for the full amount claimed. Subsequently the plaintiff again sued the defendant in regard to the same property for arrears of rent for subsequent years at the rate claimed in the former suit. The defendant had the land measured, adduced evidence, and endeavoured to raise the same defence as he had in the previous suit. No allegation was made to the effect that the rent had been altered in consequence of anything that had happened since the previous decision. The lower Courts, without considering the evidence adduced by the defendant, held that the defendant could not again raise the same contention, as the question had already been considered and determined in the previous suit, and was res judicata between the parties. Held that the previous decision did not operate as res judicata, and that the lower Courts ought to have determined on the evidence adduced what the amount of rent in question was. NIL MADHUB SARKAR v. BROJO NATH SINGHA

55. ——— Rent, decision as to amount claimed in a previous suit, if res judicata in a subsequent suit—Fresh evidence and defence in a subsequent rent suit, Admissibility of.—The previous decision in a suit for rent does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit where the amount of rent subsequently accrued due is in issue. It is open to the defendant to raise fresh defence and adduce fresh evidence, and the Court must determine upon the evidence adduced as to whether the rent claimed in the particular suit is or is not due. Hurry Behari Bhagat v. Pargun Ahir, I. L. R., 19 Cal., 666, and Nil Madhab Sarkar v. Brojo Nath Singha, I. L. R., 21 Cal., 236, followed. JOTINDRA MOHAN TAGORE v. SHUMBU CHUNDER BHUTTACHARJEE . 4 C. W. N., 43

56. ——— Decree by ijaradar whether evidence when the superior landlord sues for rent—Ex-parte decree not deciding rate of rent.—A decree obtained in a previous suit for rent by an ijaradar does not operate against the tenant as res judicata on the question whether the relation of landlord and tenant exists in a subsequent suit for rent brought by the superior landlord. The decision in that suit where the rate of rent was not in issue does not operate as res judicata, in the subsequent suit against the tenant, as regards the rate of rent. Hurry Behari Bhagat v. Pargun Ahir, I. L. R., 19 Cal., 666, and Bakshi v. Nizamuddin, I. L. R., 20 Cal., 506, followed. BALARAM MONDUL v. KARTICK CHANDRA ROY . 4 C. W. N., 161

57. ——— Different subject-matters claimed—Malikana—Recurring liability—Judgment in first suit going to root of plaintiff's title—"Final" judgment—Judgment liable to appeal or under appeal—Effect of final decree in first suit pronounced subsequent to decision in second suit of lower Appellate Court, but before hearing of second appeal in second suit.—For the purposes of the rule of res judicata it is not essential that the subject-matters of the present and the former litigations should be identical. Where a recurring liability is the subject of claim, a previous judgment dismissing a suit between the same parties upon findings which do not go to the root of the title on which the claim rests, but relate merely to a particular item or instalment, cannot operate as res judicata. But if such previous judgment negatives the title and the main obligation itself, the plaintiff cannot re-agitate the same question of the title by claiming a subsequent item or instalment. Rajah of Pittapur v. Sri Rajah Ran Bachi Sittaya Garu, L. R., 12 I. A., 16, referred to. A judgment liable to appeal or under appeal is only a provisional and not a definite or final adjudication, and cannot operate as res judicata during the interval preceding the appeal or the interval preceding the decision of the appeal. Explanation IV of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code commented on. Kakarlapedi Suriganarayangrazu v. Chellamkuri Chellama, 5 Mad., 176, and Nilvaru v. Nilvaru, I. L. R., 6 Bom., 116, referred to. The rule of res judicata contained in s. 13 of the Code applies equally to appeals and miscellaneous proceedings as to original suits. Having regard to its main object, so far as it relates to the re-trial of an issue, it refers not to the date of the commencement of the litigation, but to the date when the Judge is called upon to decide the issue. Where, after the commencement of the trial of an issue, a final judgment upon the same issue in another case is pronounced by a competent Court (the identity of parties and other conditions of s. 13 being fulfilled), such judgment operates as res judicata upon the decision, original or appellate, of the issue in the later litigation. On the 17th August 1885 a suit was instituted for recovery of an annual malikana allowance for the years 1290, 1291, and 1292 Fasli. On the 5th October 1885 the Munsif dismissed the suit. On the 10th March 1886 the Subordinate Judge on appeal reversed the Munsif's decree and decreed the suit. On the 21st June 1886 the defendant appealed to the High Court, which on the 4th July 1887 reversed the Subordinate Judge's decree and restored that of the Munsif, on the ground that the plaintiff had never received and was not entitled to malikana. Meanwhile, on the 8th June 1886, the plaintiff brought another suit against the defendant for recovery of malikana for the year 1293 Fasli, which accrued after the institution of the former suit. By judgments dated respectively the 21st August and 27th November 1886, the lower Courts decreed this suit, holding that the Subordinate Judge's decree of the 10th March 1886 in the former suit operated as res judicata, and was conclusive in favour of the plaintiff's title to the malikana. On the 17th May 1887 the defendant appealed to the High Court, and on the 18th May 1888 (the High Court having, in the interval, dismissed the former suit by its judgment of the 4th July 1887) the appeal came on for hearing. Held that the lower Courts were wrong in holding that the Subordinate Judge's decree of the 10th March 1886 in the former suit, which, at the date of the institution of the present suit on the 8th June 1886, was liable to appeal, and, at the dates of the decisions of those Courts in August and November 1886, was the subject of a second appeal pending in the High Court, could operate as res judicata in favour of the plaintiff's title to malikana. (1) That the High Court's judgment dismissing the former suit on the 4th July 1887, though passed after the decisions of the lower Courts in the present suit and after the institution of the second appeal in the present suit, was nevertheless binding on the High Court in deciding such second appeal, and, being final, was conclusive as res judicata against the plaintiff's title to malikana. (2) That the effect of the High Court's judgment dismissing the former suit on the 4th July 1887 was not affected by the circumstance that the second suit was brought for recovery of malikana for a different year, inasmuch as that judgment went to the root of the plaintiff's title to malikana, and its scope was not limited to the particular item then claimed. BALKISHAN v. KISHAN LAL . . . I. L. R., 11 All., 148

58. ———— Fact in issue not heard and "finally decided" therein—Proceedings in a prior suit.—To support the defence of res judicata, it is not enough that the parties to the suits are the same, and that the same matter is in issue. The matter must have been heard and finally decided (s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code). In 1885 relations of a deceased proprietor, alleging their right to the inheritance, sued for a declaration that they were his next of kin. The defendant set up a title as direct descendant, claiming to be the son of that proprietor's daughter. The first Court decided that this was his true parentage, and dismissed the suit. The High Court maintained the dismissal, not upon the merits, but on the grounds that the suit was defective for want of parties, and that a declaratory decree could not be made. In 1888 the same plaintiffs, having purchased the interest of the parties not joined in the previous suit, brought the present suit, with the same object, against the same defendant, whom the Subordinate Judge (not the same officer that disposed of the former suit) now found not to have been the son of the said daughter. A Bench of the High Court (composed of Judges other than those that heard the former appeal), having examined the record of the former suit, reversed the Subordinate Judge's decision. They declined, however, to decide whether or not the latter suit was barred on the ground of res judicata. But intimating that they would have affirmed the judgment of the lower Court in the former suit had it, on the merits, come before them, they preferred that judgment to the one before them, and gave effect to this opinion by reversing the latter. Held that the question of parentage had not been heard and finally decided in the suit of 1885. The appeal in that suit had put an end to any finality in the decision of the first Court, and had not led to a decision on the merits. There was therefore no res judicata; but unless treated as such, the judgment in the former suit had little or no bearing on the question as afterwards put in issue in this. That issue had been rightly decided by the Subordinate Judge on the evidence, and his judgment was accordingly maintained. SHEOSAGAR SINGH v. SITARAM SINGH . . . I. L. R., 24 Cal., 618

59. ———— Prior decree between the same parties in the same claim—Not arriving at a final decision.—In a former suit between the same parties that were now in litigation, in which the same claim upon title was made, a decree dismissed the suit. But the judgment in the former suit stated that it was left open to the plaintiff to sue again, and that no matters affecting the rights of the parties were decided between them. Held that the prior decree was not a final decision within the meaning of s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the defence of res judicata was not maintained. PARSOTAM GIR v. NARBADA GIR . . . I. L. R., 21 All., 505

60. ———— Possession known and acquiesced in prior to adjudication—Sivaganga sanad of 1803—Fraud.—A suit was brought in 1886, grounded on fraud attributed to the lineal ancestor of the principal defendant in obtaining in 1803 the grant of the sanad of the Sivaganga zamindari, to which the plaintiff claimed title. The plaintiff's case was that the defendant's ancestor, the younger of two brothers, had fraudulently caused the sanad to be made out in his own name, whereas it was intended to be, and ought to have been, a grant to the elder brother, who was the plaintiff's lineal ancestor. Those through whom the plaintiff claimed had not made any such charge, although they had knowledge of all the facts connected with the grant of the sanad of 1803 to the younger brother, and with the long possession by him and his descendants, among whom there had been litigation, resulting in a decision adverse to the plaintiff's claim as to the ownership. The lower Appellate Court and the High Court both found that the alleged fraud had not been proved. Held that this suit could not be maintained to re-open the question. BALA GOURI VALLABHA TEVAR v. 61. ———— Circumstances and evidence to establish existence of trust.—A claim made for a share of property by inheritance from a deceased relation who had been in joint possession of it with the defendant was met by the defence that the estate had been jointly held for religious and charitable purposes under a will, the deceased having had no beneficial or heritable interest. The defendant alleged that the original owner of the property had bequeathed the property in trust for these purposes. The claimant alleged a revocation of the will, and denied that there was such a trust. One of the contentions upon this appeal was that the plaintiff was estopped from denying the existence of a trust by there having been a judgment of the High Court, in a prior suit, between the present defendant and the widow of the deceased, that judgment having stated that the trust had been recognized by him who was now defendant. Held that this was not within s. 13, Civil Procedure Code, the matter not having been tried and determined in that suit. Held also that another prior judgment, in a suit brought by others interested in the trust, which judgment found the will to have been revoked, was admissible, though not conclusive, evidence against him. BITTO KUNWAR v. 62. ——— Judgment obtained by fraud—Failure to appear and resist order granting certificate.—P died in 1889, leaving a daughter B. P., it was alleged, had made a will appointing certain persons his executors. The executors applied for a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889) to recover a debt due to the deceased's estate from one N. B. B. opposed this application, and claimed the certificate for herself by a separate application. The District Judge rejected B.'s application, and issued a certificate to the executors on the 14th September 1892. In the meantime, one M. obtained a decree against B. as legal representative of P., and in execution bought P.'s right, title, and interest in the debt due from N. On the 12th September 1892 M. applied for a certificate under Act VII of 1889 to recover this debt. The District Judge rejected this application. M. appealed to the High Court. To this appeal the executors were made parties at their own request. The High Court reversed the District Judge's order, and remanded the case for disposal on the merits. Upon the remand the executors did not appear before the District Judge to contest M.'s application, and the District Judge granted him a certificate. Thereupon he applied for revocation of the certificate previously granted to the executors; and the executors in their turn applied for revocation of the certificate granted to him. The District Judge revoked M.'s certificate on the ground that he had fraudulently concealed from the Court the previous grant of a certificate to the executors. Against this order M. appealed to the High Court, contending (inter alia) that the executors, not having resisted his application for a certificate after the case had been remanded by the High Court, were estopped, on the principle of res judicata, from applying for a revocation of the certificate granted to him. Held that the executors were not estopped. The executors, having applied to be made parties to the appeal proceedings, were bound to appear in the Court below, and their failure to do so disabled them from pleading objections such as the collusive character of the decree and B.'s want of title, but it did not operate as res judicata, especially when there was reason to suspect fraud on the part of M. The order obtained by him could not have the effect of res judicata, unless the executors, being called on to dispute it, had failed to do so. A party to a proceeding is never disabled from showing that a judgment or order has been obtained by the adverse party by fraud. MANCHHARAM v. KALIDAS

66. ——— Application under Administrator General's Act (XXIV of 1867), Order on—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 13—Act II of 1874, s. 63—"Suit."—An application by petition under s. 63 of Act II of 1874 was a "suit" within the meaning of s. 13 of Act X of 1877, and therefore such an application was barred by the disposal of a former application in the same matter under the same section, or under s. 60 of Act XXIV of 1867, which the Act of 1874 repealed: this was so whether the order was one for payment of money or one dismissing the petition. S. 63, Act II of 1874, contemplates that the money, which is the subject of the petition, may be claimed by parties other than the applicant, and that those parties may appear and be represented at the hearing; and the words "binding on all parties" were intended to make the order binding upon such parties as well as on the petitioner. SMITH v. 69. Investigation under s. 381, Civil Procedure Code, 1877—Title, Question of Possession.—An investigation under s. 381 of the Civil Procedure Code (prior to the Amendment Act of 1879) was limited to the fact of possession, and was no bar to a subsequent suit brought to try the title to the land in dispute. CHINNASAMI PILLAI v. KRISHNA PILLAI I. L. R., 3 Mad., 104

70. Order for abatement of suit—Difference of procedure under Civil Procedure Codes, 1859 and 1877, s. 371.—Certain property, having been mortgaged, was sold in execution of a decree against the mortgagor, and the decree-holder became the purchaser. The mortgagee subsequently sued upon his mortgage, making the purchaser a defendant, but pending the suit the latter died, and the suit was not revived against his representatives. A decree was, in 1876, obtained, and in execution of that decree the property in question was purchased by the plaintiff, who now sued to recover possession of the same from the representatives of the purchaser at the former execution sale. Held that the matter was not res judicata by reason of the mortgage suit, inasmuch as that suit having been under Act VIII of 1859, the abatement had not the effect which such an abatement under Act X of 1877 would have had, viz., being a bar to a fresh suit in the same cause of action. NISTARINI DEBI v. BROJO NATH MOOKHOPADHYA [10 C. L. R., 229]

71. Withdrawal from suit with permission to bring a fresh suit—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 97.—A suit is not barred as res judicata because, in a former case between the same parties, and in the same cause of action, the plaintiff, after the evidence had been recorded, but before final judgment was passed, obtained the Court's permission to withdraw the suit with reservation of leave to bring another. MONA BIBEE v. OOMED ALI [16 W. R., 276]

72. Dismissal of plea of set-off—Subsequent suit for same claim.—The plea of set-off is one form of bringing a suit, the defendant becoming in regard thereto a plaintiff, and he cannot therefore be allowed to set up a claim for which a suit had been previously brought by him and dismissed. ABDOOLLAH KHAN v. 73. Landlord and tenant—Sale for arrears of rent—Deposit to protect under-tenure—Set-off—Voluntary payment.—L and R, the holders of a patni estate, granted in 1856 a dar-patni lease to S at an annual rent, the lease stipulating that S should have full power of sale and gift, but should not sub-let without the patnidar's consent. The lease contained no stipulation for the registration of any vendee or donee. In 1860 S sold the dar-patni lease to K, the deed of sale, which was duly registered, providing for mutation of names in the patnidar's books. No such mutation was ever effected by K, who was never recognized as their tenant by L and R, the rent of the dar-patni being paid in the name of S. In 1864 the rent due from the patnidars being in arrear, the samindar proceeded to sell the patni under Regulation VIII of 1819. Thereupon K, in order to protect his under-tenure, deposited in the Collectorate, on 17th November 1864, a sum of money, on which the sale was stayed. K, being then in arrear in the payment of his dar-patni rent, claimed to set off the amount deposited in the Collectorate against the rent due to L and R. This L and R refused to allow, and they brought a suit in the Collector's Court against S and his sureties to recover the arrears of rent. In that suit K intervened, claiming the benefit of the set-off, to which, however, the High Court, on 26th June 1866, on appeal, held that he was not entitled, the deposit being merely a voluntary payment by K. On 30th October 1867 K brought a regular suit against S and L and R to recover the amount of the deposit and obtained a decree, but the decision was reversed on appeal and the suit dismissed for want of jurisdiction. On 6th June 1869 K filed his plaint in the proper Court. Held that he was entitled to recover the amount deposited by him in the Collectorate, and that the suit was not barred as being res judicata by the decision of 26th June 1866. LUCKINABAIN MITTER v. KHETTRO PAL SINGH ROY [13 B. L. R., P. C., 146; 20 W. R., 380]

74. Set-off, Plea of, in respect of claim dismissed in former suit—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 13.—In a suit to recover a sum of money due as wages, the plaintiff alleging that the defendant had engaged him to sell cloth on his account at a monthly salary, the defendant claimed a set-off as the price of cloth which he alleged the plaintiff had sold on his account on commission. It appeared that the defendant had previously sued the plaintiff to recover the same amount as was now claimed by way of set-off, as being due for the price of cloth sold and delivered by the defendant to him; and the plaintiff (then defendant) pleaded that there had been no sale to him, but the cloth had been delivered to him on commission sale. The suit was dismissed on the ground that there was no proof of a sale of cloth, and the question whether any sum was due for cloth sold on commission sale was not gone into. The cloth now alleged to have been delivered on commission sale was the same as that alleged in the former suit to have been actually sold to the plaintiff. Held that the claim for such set-off was not barred under the provisions of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. AMIR ZAMA v. 75. Order of former Magistrate for maintenance—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 536—Maintenance of wife—Adultery of wife subsequent to order for maintenance.—A husband, upon whom an order to make an allowance for the maintenance of his wife had been made under s. 536 of Act X of 1872, objected to the payment of the allowance on the ground that his wife was living in adultery. The Magistrate, entertaining this objection, disallowed it, on the ground that the charge of adultery against the wife was not established. The husband subsequently again objected to the payment of the allowance on the same ground. The Magistrate, entertaining the second objection, allowed it, and directed the husband to discontinue paying the allowance. His order was based on proof of adultery by the wife before the date of the order of the former Magistrate. Held, on the general principle of the rule of res judicata, that the second Magistrate was wrong in law in re-opening matters already adjudicated upon, and his order directing the discontinuance of the allowance on the ground of facts antecedent to the former Magistrate's order must be held to be illegal. LARAITI v. An application by T to have the decree set aside was dismissed. The defendant afterwards applied to have the attachment and all the proceedings set aside and declared null and void. Quære—Whether the former refusal to set it aside would be a bar to prevent the setting aside by the Court. LADKUVARBHAI v. 77. — Previous suit by next friend dismissed for default—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 158 (Act VIII of 1859), s. 148—Evidence of fraud of next friend—Limitation.—A sued in 1885 to recover certain estates from B, alleging claim under his adoption which took place in 1885. A suit to recover the same estates had been filed on behalf of A by his next friend and had been dismissed for default in 1872. In 1875 A, being still a minor, relinquished by deed his claim to the estates for Rs12,000, but now alleged that he thought he was relinquishing it only in favour of the defendant's predecessor in title, who died in 1883, having been in possession of the estates since 1867. The plaintiff attained his majority in 1878. Held that the claim was res judicata, the plaintiff having failed to prove fraud on the part of his next friend, and that, whether the cause of action arose in 1865 or 1867, it was equally barred from 1879. Per Cur.—The plea of res judicata ordinarily presupposes an adjudication on the merits; but s. 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act VIII of 1859) contains a statutory direction that, in case the plaintiff neglects to produce evidence and to prove his claim as he is bound to do, the Court do proceed to decide the suit on such material as is actually before it, and that the decision so pronounced shall have the force of a decree on the merits, notwithstanding the default on the part of the plaintiff. VENKATACHALAM v. definitive or final adjudication, and cannot operate as res judicata during the interval preceding the appeal or the interval preceding the decision of the appeal. Explanation IV of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code commented on. Kakarlapudi Sriyanarayana Razu v. Shellamkuri Shellamma, 5 Mad., 176, and Niltaru v. Nilcaru, I. L. R., 6 Bom., 110, referred to. The rule of res judicata contained in s. 13 of the Code applies equally to appeals and miscellaneous proceedings as to original suits. Having regard to its main object, so far as it relates to the re-trial of an issue, it refers not to the date of the commencement of the litigation, but to the date when the Judge is called upon to decide the issue. Where, after the commencement of the trial of an issue, a final judgment upon the same issue in another case is pronounced by a competent Court (the identity of parties and other conditions of s. 13 being fulfilled), such judgment operates as res judicata upon the decision, original or appellate, of the issue in the later litigation. BALKISHAN v. 79. — Award as to partition in prior arbitration proceedings, Effect of—Subsequent suit for partition.—Disputes having arisen in a joint Hindu family, the parties submitted the question of partition to arbitrators, who passed an award thereon. Both parties objected to the award, and it was never carried into effect. On a suit for partition being filed, Held that such an award was equivalent to a final judgment and binding on the parties in the absence of positive evidence that both parties agreed that the former state of things should be restored, and that therefore the present suit for partition could not be maintained. KRISHNA PANDA v. 80. — Refusal to file award—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 13 and 525.—The refusal of an application for the filing of an award under s. 525, Civil Procedure Code, merely leaves the award to have its own ordinary legal effect, and it cannot be contended that an award is not to be relied on as a defence in a suit relating to the subject-matter dealt with by it, only because such an application has not been granted. Separable claims, viz., (a) to share property by right of inheritance, and (b) for the office of lambardar, had been disposed of, on the reference of the present parties, without the intervention of a Court by an arbitrator's award between them. An application under s. 525 had been rejected, for the reason, among others, that (b) was not a matter of civil jurisdiction. Held, however, that the present suit, which was grounded on (a), was barred by the award made. MUHAMMAD NEWAZ KHAN v. 81. — Consent decree—Decree dismissing party from suit.—In 1839, in contemplation of a marriage between M and G, a deed of settlement was executed which provided that, during the lifetime of M's father, half of the rents and profits of two houses in Calcutta, held for a term of years, should be taken by him and half by G; that after the death of M's father, the rent and profits should go to G and M, and upon the death of either of them to the survivor; and after the death of the survivor to the use absolutely of the issue of the marriage, if any. The father of M died in 1841, and G on the 23rd of November in the same year. M, on the 21st December 1841, shortly after the death of her husband, married A S, and on the 8th of April 1842 gave birth to a child, who was named E and afterwards married to T. M died in 1850. By A S she had two children, the plaintiff and a son G S. On the 7th November 1859 E and her husband filed a bill of complaint in the Supreme Court, Calcutta, against the trustees of the settlement of 1839, and against A S and G S, who was then an infant, in which she claimed to be entitled to the properties absolutely. On the 21st of June 1860 a decree was made dismissing the suit against G S, and declaring that the properties covered by the deed of settlement were personalty. In the present suit it was objected that the decree of the Supreme Court could not bind G S, as he was dismissed from the suit, and because the decree was a decree by consent. Held that the decree was binding upon G S and persons claiming to derive their title from him. A consent decree is as binding on the parties to the proceedings in which it is made as a decree made after a contentious trial. In re South American and Mexican Co., *L. The plaintiff then gave express notice of the assignment to the mortgagor, and sued on the bond again. Held the claim was not res judicata, and the second suit was accordingly not precluded by s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. *RAMIREDDI v. The first defendant afterwards gave a ticca of the lands to the second defendant, who turned the plaintiff out of possession before the term of the zur-i-peahgi lease had expired. Plaintiff then sued the first and second defendants, basing his cause of action on the dispossession by the second defendant, and praying for the recovery of the mortgage-money by sale of the mortgaged property. The suit was dismissed, the Judge observing that plaintiff's proper remedy was to bring a suit for possession. Plaintiff then brought a subsequent suit for possession against the same parties, and on the same cause of action. The purchaser of plot 155 sold it to A, who in 1873 sued the tenant of a portion of the land for rent. In this suit A prayed that it might be declared that he was the owner. The tenant alleged that B, the purchaser of plot 147, was the owner of the land in respect of which rent was sought to be recovered, and B was made a party to the suit. A subsequently did bring a suit with that object against his co-parceners, but allowed it to be dismissed against him for default. B now brought a suit against A and his co-parceners for possession of A's share in such family property. his failure to attend, her suit was dismissed. After the death of the widow, her daughter sued the same defendant on behalf of her two minor sons, as being entitled in reversion to their grandfather's share, to recover the share which was the subject of the former suit: the defendant was summoned as a witness, but failed to attend. Held that the suit was not barred under s. 2, Act VIII of 1859, as being res judicata, until it was shown that the former decree had been obtained after a fair trial of the right, so as to bind not only the widow, but the reversioners. The defendant having failed to attend and give evidence on this point, the Court was justified in giving the plaintiff a decree under s. 170, Act VIII of 1859. BRAMMOYE DASSEE v. 96. ——— Dismissal of suit for default—Difference in cause of action—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 13, 102, 103.—The dismissal of a suit in terms of s. 102, Civil Procedure Code, is not intended to operate in favour of the defendant as res judicata. When read with s. 103, it precludes a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action, referring, irrespectively of the defence or the relief prayed, entirely to the grounds, or alleged media, on which the plaintiff asks the Court to decide in his favour. Brother's sons, as nearest agnates of a deceased proprietor, sued for a decree, declaring that a gift, before then made by the widow in favour of her daughter's son, of the estate of her late husband, would not operate against their right of succession on her death. A prior suit before the date of the gift, brought by two of the plaintiffs for a declaratory decree, and an injunction restraining the widow from alienating the same estate, had been dismissed under the provisions of ss. 102 and 103, Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877). In 1883 the defendant's predecessor and vendor S had sued the plaintiff's tenant A in the Mamlatdar's Court, alleging that A had disturbed his possession by putting sweepings upon the land and asking to be protected in his enjoyment. He did not appear on the day fixed for hearing, and his suit was dismissed under s. 13 of Bombay Act III of 1876. He did not file a suit to set aside this order of dismissal. It was contended in the present suit now brought by the plaintiff that after three years, by the combined operation of art. 47 and s. 28 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), the defendant's vendor S had lost his title to the land which thus became vested in the plaintiff. Held that, except as evidence of the plaintiff's title to the land, the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court in 1883 and his decree did not affect the present suit in ejectment. As such evidence, they were before the lower Court. Ramchandra v. Bhikabai, I. L. R., 6 Bom., 447, referred to RAJARAM v. GANESH HARI KARKHANIS I. L. R., 21 Bom., 91

101. ———— Dismissal for undervaluation.—A suit was brought in the Civil Court of a Munsif, who gave judgment for the plaintiffs, but his decree was reversed by the District Judge, on the ground that the claim was improperly valued. A second suit, on the same cause of action, was then brought in the Court of the Munsif, who again decided for the plaintiffs; but his decree was reversed by the District Judge, on the ground that the suit was prohibited by Bombay Regulation II of 1827, s. 21. The High Court, on special appeal, reversed that decision, and remanded the suit; and the District Judge then threw out the claim, under s. 2 of Act VIII of 1859, on the ground that the cause of action had already been heard and determined. In a second special appeal against this decision,—Held that the plaintiffs were not precluded from presenting a fresh plaint in respect of the same cause of action, and that the case came within the spirit of s. 86 of Act VIII of 1859, as, there being no express power given by the Code to reject a plaint after it had been registered by reason of the claim being improperly valued, the doing so ought to have only the same effect as if the plaint had been originally rejected. DULLABH JOGI v. The decree included an order in these terms: "This order will not prevent the plaintiff from instituting a suit for possession of the one-third interest of Musammatt Lachminia in the fields specified in the deed of sale," upon which the suit was based. No appeal was preferred from this decree. Subsequently the plaintiff brought another suit upon the same title to recover possession of the one-third share referred to in the order just quoted. Held by the Full Bench that the Court in the former suit had no power to include in its decree of dismissal any such reservation or order; that the fact that the decree was not appealed against did not give the order contained in it, which was an absolute nullity, any effect; that as in the former suit the plaintiff could have obtained a decree for the one-third share now claimed, and the whole of the

The second and third defendants in that suit (the defendants in the present suit), who were inhabitants of Surat, pleaded that as against them the Court had no jurisdiction. The suit was accordingly dismissed as against them for want of jurisdiction, but as against the first defendant, who resided in Bombay, the Court passed a decree for the plaintiff. The plaintiff then brought the present suit against the defendants in the Surat Court to enforce their liability under the mortgage. The defendants pleaded that the claim against them was barred by the dismissal of the former suit. Held that the suit was not barred. A previous suit on the same cause of action had been heard and dismissed on the ground of limitation. Held that the present suit was not barred (as res judicata) under s. 2 of Act VIII of 1859 (corresponding with Act X of 1877, s. 13), inasmuch as, the first suit having been brought after the period allowed by law, the Court in which it was instituted was not competent to hear and determine it. *BRINDABAN CHUNDER SIKKAR v. 110. — Dismissal of suit for multifariousness—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 2.—The dismissal of a suit for multifariousness is not a hearing and determination of the suit within the meaning of s. 2, Act VIII of 1859. FATTEH SINGH v. LACHMI KOOR

112. — Dismissal of suit on failure of plaintiff to pay summons costs.—Suit subsequently brought for same property.—In June 1878 the plaintiffs brought a suit to establish their title to the property attached, and for confirmation of possession. Pending this suit, the principal defendant died, and the plaintiffs applied for an order to substitute certain persons as defendants. The Court thereupon directed the issue of a summons on the defendants proposed by the plaintiffs to appear and defend the suit, but the plaintiffs failing to pay the costs of the service of this summons, the suit was dismissed on the 14th March 1879. On the 4th March 1880 the plaintiffs again brought a suit to establish their title to the same property and for confirmation of possession. Held that, as the first suit had not been dismissed upon the merits, the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the second suit. *JESESSUR BHUGUT v. 381.—The plaintiff sued the defendants on a promissory note. The defendants filed a written statement, alleging that the note had been obtained by the plaintiff by fraud and false representation. Previously to the filing of the present suit by the plaintiff, the defendants had brought a suit against the plaintiff, in which they prayed that the said promissory note might be delivered up to be cancelled. Their plaint in that suit contained allegations of fraud and want of consideration identical with those contained in their written statement in the present suit. The plaintiffs in the former suit (the present defendants) having failed to give security for costs, the suit was dismissed under s. 381 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877). It was now contended that the defendants were estopped from pleading, as a defence to the present suit, the fraud and want of consideration which had been alleged by them as plaintiffs in the former suit which had been dismissed. Held that the defence might be pleaded, and that the question of fraud and want of consideration was not res judicata within the meaning of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. The previous suit had been dismissed by reason of the plaintiffs' (the present defendants') failure to give security for costs; and a Court cannot be said to "hear and decide" a matter which it is relieved from hearing and deciding by the plaintiff's default. Under s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), a defendant may be precluded from pleading as a defence matter which is res judicata. Quere—Whether a plaintiff, whose suit has been dismissed under s. 381, can again litigate the subject-matter of the dismissed suit. *BUNGRAV RAVJI v. 116. — Dismissal of suit "in present form"—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 18, expl. III.—K, the purchaser of certain immovable property in execution of a decree, sued for possession of the same. The suit was dismissed "in the form in which it was brought" because the plaintiff had not filed with the plaint the sale-certificate. K subsequently brought a fresh suit. Held that the dismissal of the former suit "in the form it was brought" did not amount to permission to sue again contemplated by s. 373 of the Civil Procedure Code, and such dismissal must be regarded as a "decision" thereof in the sense of s. 18, explanation III, and therefore as a bar to the fresh suit. *GANESH RAI v. 117. — Dismissal of suit for misjoinder.—Civil Procedure Code, s. 18—Dismissal of suit—Court Fees Act, s. 10, cl. ii.—The purchaser of certain immovable property in execution of a decree sued for possession of the same. The suit was dismissed "in its present form" (bahatsiyat maujud) upon two grounds: first, with reference to s. 10 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) that the suit was undervalued and the plaintiff had failed to pay, within the time fixed, additional court fees required by the Court; and, secondly, for misjoinder. The purchaser subsequently brought a second suit.

—continued.

Held that the dismissal of the former suit was not under the circumstances, a decision within the meaning of s. 18 of the Civil Procedure Code such as could bar the second suit by way of res judicata. Per MAHMOOD, J.—The object of s. 10 and indeed of the whole of the Court Fees Act is to lay down rules for the collection of one form of taxation, and the rule that statutes which impose pecuniary burdens or encroach upon, or qualify the rights of, the subject must be strictly construed, applies with special force to such provisions of the Act as provide a penalty, whatever its nature may be. S. 10 is simply a penal clause to enforce the collection of the Court-fees, and dismissal of a suit under its provisions cannot operate as res judicata. Also per MAHMOOD, J.—The condition in s. 18 of the Civil Procedure Code, that the former suit must have been "heard and finally decided," means that a former judgment proceeding wholly on a technical defect or irregularity, and not upon the merits, is not a bar to a subsequent suit for the same cause of action. It is not every decree or judgment which will operate as res judicata, and every dismissal of a suit does not necessarily bar a fresh action. It is necessary also to show that there was a decision finally granting or withholding the relief sought. Ramnath Roy Chowdhry v. Bhagbut Mohapatra, 3 W. R., Act X, 140; Shokhee Bewah v. Mehdee Mundul, 9 W. R., 827; Dullab Jogi v. Narayan Lakhu, 4 Bom., A. C., 110; Rung-rav Rarji v. Sidhi Mahomed Ebrahim, I. L. R., 6 Bom., 482; Fatleh Singh v. Lachmi Koer, 18 B. L. Also per MAHMOOD, J.—The words bahaisiyat maujuda must be taken as amounting to a permission to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit within the meaning of s. 373 of the Civil Procedure Code, and could only mean that the Judge using them in his decree had no intention to decide the case finally, so as to bar the adjudication upon the merits of the rights of the parties in a future litigation between them. The procedure provided by Ch. XXII of the Code is not the only manner in which a plaintiff can come into Court for the second time to ask for adjudication upon the merits of his rights, which were not adjudicated upon on the former occasion owing to some technical defect which proved fatal to the former suit. *Ganesh Rai v. claim, as brought, be dismissed with costs." The plaintiffs did not appeal from this decision, but subsequently brought a suit against the same defendants, claiming joint possession of the same property. Held that the suit was barred by s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court in the former suit not having reserved to the plaintiffs the right to bring a fresh action. *Ganesh v. This suit was dismissed on the ground that no partnership was proved. In 1880 plaintiff sued defendants for money due on account of a partnership entered into on 12th July 1876 for the sale of salt, and continued down to the end of 1878. Held that the plaintiff, having failed to prove in the former suit that any partnership existed between him and the defendants, was barred from bringing the present suit. SAMARAPURI CHETTI v. 127. — Finality of order.—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 244—Competency of Court.—S S brought a suit under a mortgage-bond, making R S, a subsequent incumbrancer, a defendant, and obtained a decree for a sale of the whole of the mortgaged premises. After the decree, a compromise was effected between all the parties with the exception of R S by the terms of which, in consideration of the judgment debtors (mortgagors) undertaking to do certain acts, S S promised to execute his decree against only a 3 annas 12 dams share of the mortgaged premises. The judgment-debtors (mortgagors) having failed to carry out the compromise, S S applied for a sale of the whole of the mortgaged premises, but on the petition of R S setting out the terms of the compromise to which he was no party, the Subordinate Judge, by an order of the 7th September 1885, held that under the agreement S S was entitled to sell only a 3 annas 12 dams share of the mortgaged premises, which was accordingly directed to be sold. That order was not appealed against, but subsequently in March 1886

S S made a fresh application for a sale of the remainder of the premises, R S objecting. Held that the order of the 7th September was one which the Court was competent to make under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, by reason of that order not being appealed from, it became final. BASUDEO NARAIN SINGH v. 128. — Decree against mortgaged property.—Liability of judgment-debtor to arrest under such decree—Principles of res judicata applicable to execution proceedings.—A decree cannot be extended in execution beyond the real meaning of its terms. A decree obtained on a mortgage directed that the judgment-debtor should pay the sum adjudged out of the property mortgaged. After executing the decree against the mortgaged property, the decree-holder made an application for execution against the person of the judgment debtor. A notice was issued calling upon him to show cause why execution should not be further proceeded with. But the notice did not give him any intimation of the application for the arrest of his person. He did not appear, and, in his absence, an order was made for his personal arrest; but the order was not executed, as the decree-holder did not pay the process-fee. Subsequently a fresh application was made for execution against the person of the judgment-debtor. Held that the question as to the personal liability of the judgment-debtor to satisfy the decree was not concluded by the order made in the previous execution-proceedings for execution to issue against his person. The order would have operated as a res judicata if the judgment-debtor had been called upon to contest the right claimed by the decree-holder to hold him personally liable under the decree, and had then failed in his contention to the contrary, or allowed the judgment to go by default. The order was res judicata as to the legal possibility of further execution in terms of the decree, but not as to the special construction which the judgment-creditor sought to impose on it. BUDAN v. The costs of attachment were not deposited by the day named in the order above referred to, and the Court thereupon passed the following order: "This case came on for hearing to-day: as the decree-holder has not deposited the costs of attachment, etc., therefore it is ordered that the case be struck off for default." Held that, whether this second order was an order under s. 153 of the Code of Civil Procedure deciding the application for attachment, or whether its effect was merely to remove the application from the file of pending applications without deciding it, in either case no fresh application (being of a precisely similar nature) was entertainable, though in the latter case possibly the former application might be renewed. PREMU v. There had been an application for execution in 1873. The next application was made in 1879, and it was dismissed as being barred by limitation. 137. — Order refusing to execute decree.—Attachment without sale—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 67.—The plaintiff, a judgment-creditor, had in the High Court obtained a decree against the defendant, whereby it was ordered that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 1,68,123, and that the said sum should be a charge on certain immovable properties situated in the mofussil and specified in a schedule to the decree. In August 1894 the plaintiff obtained an order for transfer of the decree to a mofussil Court and sent a copy of the decree for execution there. He obtained in that Court an order for attachment and sale of the property, but that order was reversed on appeal in May 1895, the High Court holding that the properties could not be sold in execution of the decree, but that a separate suit must be brought under a 67 of the Transfer of Property Act. The plaintiff then applied to the Court that passed the decree for an order for transmission of the decree to the mofussil Court with a view to execution. That application was refused by SALM, J., who held that the decision of May 1895 was conclusive as to the plaintiff's right

139. ——— Order refusing to award mesne profits under decree—Proceedings in execution.—Held by the Full Bench that the law of res judicata does not apply in proceedings in execution of decree. Held therefore by the referring Bench, where on an application for the execution of a decree the question was raised whether the decree awarded mesne profits or not, and the Court executing it determined that it did not award mesne profits, that such determination was not final, but such question was open to re-adjudication on a subsequent application for execution of the decree. RUP KUMAR v. 139. ——— Refusal to execute decree—Re-opening questions by successor to Judge who decided them.—On an application being made for the execution of a decree, the judgment-debtor made three objections to its execution. The first of these objections the Court executing the decree, the Subordinate Judge allowed, and refused to execute the decree. On appeal by the decree-holder, the District Judge disallowed all three such objections, holding that the decree should be executed, and remanded the case for that purpose. When the case came back to the Subordinate Judge, the judgment-debtor again raised the second and third of such objections, but the Subordinate Judge refused to entertain them, on the ground that they had already been determined by such District Judge. On appeal by the judgment-debtor, the successor of such District Judge ordered the Subordinate Judge to determine all three such objections. Held that such succeeding Judge could not re-open such questions, his predecessor having already finally determined them, and his predecessor's order, so far as such application for execution of the decree was concerned, was final. BALLABH SHANKAR v. that an application for the execution of a decree is barred by limitation, has the effect of res judicata; and although such decision may be erroneous, yet so long as it remains unrevoked in appeal it is valid and binding, and the question cannot be re-opened. A decision that an application for execution is not time-barred has a similar effect. On the 15th April 1868 the plaintiff applied for the execution of a decree held by him against the defendant, and certain houses were thereupon attached. In April 1869 the attachment was raised on the intervention of a third person. The plaintiff then brought a suit to establish his right to attach the houses, and obtained a decree on the 28th February 1871. An appeal was made, and the suit was finally decided in the plaintiff's favour in April 1873. After the plaintiff had obtained his original decree, and while the appeal was pending, he applied for the sale of the houses in execution on the 30th November 1871, and subsequently made three other applications within three years of each other, the last of which was dated the 30th October 1876. The Court rejected this last application on the 28th November 1876, on the ground that the execution of the decree was barred, as more than three years had elapsed between the first and second applications (i.e., the applications of the 15th April 1868 and 30th November 1871). The plaintiff appealed against the order, but his appeal was rejected because he had failed to produce with it a copy of the order appealed against. The plaintiff took no further steps in that proceeding, but made a fresh application for execution on the 10th August 1878. The Subordinate Judge rejected it, on the ground that the execution was barred, the matter being res judicata. On appeal the District Judge reversed that order and allowed execution. On appeal to the High Court, — Held, on the authority of Mungul Pershad Diohit v. Grija Kant Lahiri Chondhry, I. L. R., 8 Calo., 51, that the rule of res judicata applied, and that the application of the 30th November 1871 was time-barred, and, a fortiori, every subsequent application was barred. Seemle—A proceeding in execution is a proceeding which terminates in a decree as defined by s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), and is therefore a suit within the meaning of the Code. MANJUNATH BADRABHAT v. In 1851 a dispute arose as to the boundaries under the batwara, and ended in C surrendering 5½ bighas, which B was allowed to take possession of under an ikramamah executed by A to secure the costs incurred by B in the dispute. In 1874 A sued to recover possession of a moiety of the lands held jointly by him with B, and in 1875 obtained a decree for possession and wasilat, no specific mention of the 51½ bighas being made in the decree. In execution of the decree, wasilat in respect of a moiety of the 51½ bighas was allowed, an objection by the defendant to such wasilat being charged having been overruled. In 1878 B sued to recover possession of the moiety of the 51½ bighas which had been taken by A under his decree. Held that, in rejecting the objection raised by B and allowing wasilat in respect of the 51½ bighas, the Court had interpreted the decree passed, and declared that under it possession of a moiety of the 51½ bighas had been decreed and given to A, and that the suit instituted in 1878 was therefore barred. Held also that this matter, having been decided under s. 11, Act XXIII of 1861, between the parties in execution of a decree, could not be made the subject of a suit. KALI MUNDUL v. 143. — Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 230—Limitation—Vatandars (Bombay) Act, III of 1874, s. 10—Collector's certificate.—A decree of a District Court, dated 5th October 1863, declared the plaintiff to be a hereditary deputy vatandar of a certain deshpande vatan vested in the ancestors of the defendant as hereditary vatandars, and that the plaintiff, as such deputy, was entitled to receive a certain sum annually out of the income of the vatan. The decree did not explicitly deal with the claim to future payments then set up by the plaintiff as hereditary deputy vatandar. The plaintiff received moneys from time to time under the decree until 1875, but he neglected to have himself registered as a representative vatandar under Bombay Act III of 1874, s. 56. In 1875 he made a claim for certain arrears of the allowance which he alleged to be due under the decree, and he attached certain moneys out of the income of the defendant's vatan. The Collector issued a certificate under s. 10 of the Vatandars Act (III of 1874) for the removal of the attachment, and the attachment was accordingly removed by the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff appealed from the order of removal, but the Appellate Court confirmed that order. On second appeal to the High Court, it was held on 23rd June 1879 that the lower Courts were right in raising the attachment; that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to register the plaintiff as a representative vatandar, and that the Collector was the proper authority to be referred to. Thereupon the plaintiff applied to the Collector to cancel the certificate which had removed the attachment, and to register him as a representative vatandar. The Collector rejected the plaintiff's application on 31st March 1881. In 1881 the plaintiff presented a fresh dakhast to attach the same vatan property in virtue of the said decree of 1863, but the application was rejected as res judicata by both the lower Courts. They held that the certificate of the Collector, which remained uncanceled, operated as a bar. On second appeal to the High Court, Held, reversing the order of the lower Courts, that the decree was one capable of execution. Held, as regards the Collector's certificate, that under s. 10 of the Vatandars

Act (Bombay), III of 1874, the certificate was exhausted in operating on the execution which it stopped, and that the lower Court ought to have dealt with the case apart from that certificate. GOPAL HANMANT DESHKA v. KONDO KASHINATH

144. — Withdrawal of application for execution—Effect of such withdrawal.—Orders in execution proceedings, if not appealed from, are binding on the parties to the suit in all subsequent proceedings in that suit, on principles analogous to those of res judicata strictly so called. It is therefore necessary to constitute a bar that there should be a hearing and final decision. Where an application for execution is allowed to be withdrawn, the matters in dispute are not heard and decided. There is therefore no res judicata. HARI GANESH v. YAMUNABAI . I. L. 145. — Principle of res judicata as applied to execution-proceedings—Civil Procedure Code, s. 573.—Where a judgment-debtor, being entitled and having an opportunity to plead s. 573 of the Code of Civil Procedure as a bar to execution of the decree against him, neglects to do so, and the application in respect of which such objection might have been taken is entertained by the Court and orders passed thereon, the principle of res judicata will apply to such proceedings, and the judgment-debtor cannot at a subsequent stage of the same execution-proceedings object that such previous application for execution ought, in fact, to have been held to be barred by the operation of s. 573 above-mentioned. SHER SINGH v. 146. — Orders disallowing objection to party representative—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 13 and 244.—G brought a suit against I for the establishment of her rights as purchaser of certain immoveable properties sold in execution of a decree obtained against I and for possession of the same. After the settlement of issues, but before the suit was finally disposed of, I died, and his brother J was made defendant as his legal representative. J consented to the suit being tried on the defence raised by I and upon the issues already settled. The suit was decreed, it being held that G was the purchaser. In execution of this decree, in which G sought to obtain possession, J objected that he was entitled to a half share of some and to the entire sixteen annas of the other properties, and that his brother I had no right whatever in the same. This objection was disallowed by the Court executing the decree on the ground that it had not been raised in the original suit, and that, as the decree had been passed in the presence of the party then objecting, he was not entitled to urge it. Thereupon J brought a suit against G to establish his rights. The defence was that the order passed in the execution-proceedings, disallowing the plaintiff's objection, was a bar to the suit under s. 18 and s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held that the order disallowing the plaintiff's objection did not operate as res judicata under s. 18 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Delhi and London Bank v. Orchard, 1 L. R., 3 Cal., 47; L. R., 4 I. A., 127, relied on. Held also that this order was no bar to the suit under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. *Kanai Lal Khan v. 147. — Order in execution-proceedings that deed was valid—Sale of two plots of land by one sale-deed—Validity of deed questioned in dispute as to one of the plots—Subsequent dispute as to second plot included in deed—Question of validity of deed again raised—Orders in execution-proceedings how far final—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 18 and 288.—The plaintiff purchased two distinct plots of land (A and B) from one G by a deed of sale dated 30th September 1875. In 1884, in execution of a decree against G, plot A was attached and sold as his property, and purchased by the defendant. The plaintiff did not intervene, and at that time took no steps to establish his alleged right to this land. In 1885 the defendant obtained another decree against G, and in execution attached plot B. The plaintiff intervened, and claimed the property attached as his own under the sale-deed of 30th December 1875. The defendant disputed the sale, but the Court found in favour of the validity of the sale-deed, and allowed the plaintiff's claim. The defendant did not file a suit to set aside this order. The plaintiff then filed a suit to establish his title to plot A, relying on his sale-deed of the 30th December 1875. The defendant again disputed the sale, pleading that it was a colourable and fictitious transaction. Held that the order in the execution-proceeding did not operate as res judicata, and did not estop the defendant from contesting the validity of the sale-deed in the present suit. Per JARDINE, J.—If the decision as to the validity of the deed had been a final decision in a suit as distinguished from an execution-proceeding, it would have created an estoppel by res judicata. Between the parties the orders to which s. 288 of the Civil Procedure Code refers are, subject to the result of a suit, if any, conclusive, but this conclusiveness exists only as regards the particular property in dispute. *DINKAR BALLAL CHAKRADEV v. 6. CAUSES OF ACTION.

148. — Nature of cause of action—Obligation to disclose title.—A plaintiff's cause of action is a very different thing from his title; the one being something done contrary to his interest, which obliges him to seek the aid of a Court of Justice, the other being the proof that something affords him a valid ground for relief. *DUDSAR BIBEH v. In 1881 A sued the same defendants to recover the same lands, on the ground that as karnavan of the tarwad he was entitled to resume possession of the lands. Held, reversing the decrees of the lower Courts, that the suit brought by A in 1881 was not barred by s. 18 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1877. Per MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J.—Expl. 154. — Civil Procedure Code, 1859—Suit for land based on plaintiff's title—Previous suit as lessor—Omission to make title a ground of attack in previous suit No denial of plaintiff's title as landlord—Maintainability of suit.—In a previous suit, brought in 1890, plaintiff had sued for the recovery of certain land which he alleged to have been let verbally to the defendants in 1886. Defendants denied the verbal letting, and pleaded that they held the land from plaintiff's predecessor under a written agreement of 1876. The Court passed a decree in plaintiff's favour, holding that the lease under the written agreement had expired prior to 1886, and that the subsequent enjoyment of the land was under a verbal agreement. No steps were taken to execute that decree. Plaintiff now sued defendants for the recovery of the same land, together with arrears of rent basing his claim on the same written agreement of 1876, and also on his title as owner thereof. The District Court held the claim on the written agreement to be res judicata, and that plaintiff could not now sue upon his title, as that should have been made a ground of attack in the former suit. On appeal to the High Court, Held that, inasmuch as plaintiff's title as landlord was recognized in the suit of 1890, the defendants could not have acquired a prescriptive title as against him in 1898, when the present suit was filed; and that plaintiff was therefore entitled to recover the land upon his title independently of any letting by him to the defendants. That the claim for arrears of rent under the old written agreement was res judicata by reason of the former suit, but that plaintiff's omission to sue on the strength of his general title in the former suit was no bar to the present suit, inasmuch as his title as landlord had never been disputed. Zamora v. Calicut v. Narayanan Mussad, I. L. R., 22 Mad., 828, referred to. KUTTI AM v. CHINDAN I. L. R., 23 Mad., 629

155. — Dismissal of suit for proprietary right to land—Subsequent suit for possession of portion of same land as planter of the trees on it. The dismissal of a suit in which the plaintiff had claimed a proprietary title in certain land held not to bar a subsequent suit in which he prayed for a declaration that, as planter of the trees and constructor of a tank in a garden forming a portion of the land, he was entitled to retain possession of the garden and tank. GOSHAIN JUGOOPROEN v. BISHEEN DYAL CHUND 2 Agra, 32

156. — Dismissal of suit on demise as continuation of prior demise—Subsequent suit on prior demise.—In 1883 plaintiff sued to recover certain land from the defendant on a demise of 1856 which he alleged was a renewal of a prior demise of 1836. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the demise of 1856 was not proved. Plaintiff then sued to recover the same land on a demise of 1836 and on title. Held that the decree in the former suit was no bar to this suit. KADUNNI v. KATTAMMA I. L. R., 9 Mad., 26

157. — Suit for land based on plaintiff's title—Prior suit alleging the defendants held on lease from plaintiff.—In a previous suit in which plaintiff had been a party, it had been attempted to assert plaintiff's title to a piece of land occupied by the defendants by proving that they held the same by virtue of an alleged specific lease. The Court had held that no such lease had been executed. Plaintiff now claimed the land as belonging to his devasom, and sued to recover it on the strength of his title; he also set up the alleged lease once more. Held that, though the question of the validity of the lease was res judicata, plaintiff was at liberty to sue also on the strength of his title, independently of the lease, and he was not estopped from so suing by the fact that the former suit had been based on the lease alone. If the relation of landlord and tenant were shown to have existed prior to the specific lease sued upon, it was for the tenant to prove that such relation had ceased to exist. In the absence of such proof, the relation would be presumed to continue, and the tenant's possession in that case could not be adverse. ZAMORIN OF CALICUT v. NARAYANAN MUSSAD [I. L. R., 23 Mad., 323]

158. — Suit for same property on different cause of action—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 2.—The plaintiff sued to recover certain land, on the ground that he had been forcibly dispossessed of it by the defendant. As the plaintiff did not prove the alleged dispossession, his claim was rejected, but the Court suggested that he might recover in a fresh suit, treating the defendant as a trustee, and offering to make certain payments to him. The plaintiff then filed a fresh suit, framing it in the manner indicated by the Court. Held that the latter suit, being based on a different cause of action from the former, was not barred, and that the question at issue between the parties was not res judicata. BHITO SHANKAR PATIL v. RAMCHANDRARAY BASHUNATH JAHAGIRDAR [8 Bom., A. C., 80]

159. — Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 2—Decision as to nature of document.—In 1864 the original plaintiff, L, as heir of F, brought a suit against J (the guardian of F), A, B, and C, to recover a piece of land. The suit was rejected, as it was proved that (though the plaintiff was the heir of F) F's guardian had mortgaged the land for necessary purposes to C, the two defendants A and B being merely tenants of C. The plaintiff then sued C for redemption of the mortgaged premises. Held that the second suit was not barred under s. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held also that the fact of the document under which C held the land being described in the Court's judgment in the earlier suit as an instrument of sale was not conclusive in the second suit as to the real nature of the instrument. VALLABH BHULA v. RAMA 9 Bom., 65

en.—A suit was brought by A to recover property, in which, on appeal to the Privy Council, two questions arose, viz., whether the property was to pass as divided or undivided property, and whether such property was conveyed away to A's father by a deed of testamentary disposition. The lower Court had decided only the latter point, and the Privy Council remanded the case for determination of the former point. On a second appeal to the Privy Council, that Committee were about to enter upon the question as to the validity of the testamentary paper, when A gave up the point that the paper was in any sense testamentary in its character, and disclaimed having any title under it as a testamentary devise, and the Privy Council therefore did not decide that question. Held that a subsequent suit by A, in which he sought to recover the property by setting up the paper as a valid will and testament, was a suit instituted without bona fides, and could not be allowed to proceed, because the nature of the paper was in issue in the former suit, and what was in issue must be taken to have been decided by the judgment. RAGHOONADHA PERYA OODYA TAYER v. action.—M brought a suit to obtain her share of the entire property of A, her deceased father. It was pleaded, with respect to a certain portion of the property, that A had made it over by parol gift to his minor son. The case came before the High Court on special appeal, when it was contended on behalf of M, the appellant, that the gift was not proved, and that some portion of the property was "mush's" (undivided), and the gift in regard to it invalid. The High Court refused to allow the last plea, which had not been taken in the Court of first instance, to be taken in appeal, the point raised being one of fact, and, as the gift had been established by evidence, dismissed the appeal. F, the purchaser of the rights and interests in A's estate of W, a defendant in the suit, brought a suit against his vendor, M, and the guardian of the minor, to obtain possession of the property conveyed by the sale in which property affected by the gift was included, and claimed the setting aside of the gift because a portion of the property conveyed by it was undivided. Held that his suit was not barred by s. 2 of Act VIII of 1859. IMAMAN v. 168. ———— Suit to compel execution of release from document—Suit to declare document executed for nominal purpose.—On 23rd March 1878 plaintiff executed to defendant a document purporting to be a deed of gift. In 1886 plaintiff sued to cancel the document, alleging that defendant on 11th May 1881 had agreed to execute a release, but had not done so; that suit was dismissed for non-payment of duty due under the Court Fees Act. The plaintiff now sued in 1887 for a declaration that the document "was executed for nominal purposes and was not intended to take effect." Held that, since the cause of action in the suits of 1886 and 1887 were not the same, the claim in the latter suit was not res judicata. NAGATHAL v. 169. ———— Suit for same object on different cause of action—Decision in former suit.—Plaintiff, claiming as grandson of one S M, the only undivided brother of S, sought to recover half of the village sold by S to first defendant's father in 1855; the village having been (as alleged) family property, and sold without the consent of plaintiff's father, who succeeded his father, S M, and not for family purposes. In a former suit (No. 8 of 1855), brought by the plaintiff's father against S and R, the father of the present first defendant, and the present second defendant, the paternal nephew of the first defendant, for possession of the whole of the family property belonging to him and S as co-parceners, and to rescind the sale to R, the plaintiff stated, amongst other things, that S was imbecile; and that the sale-deed was obtained by taking a fraudulent advantage of his imbecility, and that it was invalid as being made without plaintiff's consent. The Court decided that S was "both physically and mentally qualified to manage and legally competent to deal with the estate, supposing it to be undivided, to the extent of his own share," and dismissed the suit. In 1863 the plaintiff again sued the present defendant for the whole of the village on the same ground of imbecility and fraud. The Civil Court decided that the suit was barred by the decree in the first suit, and on appeal the decree was affirmed. Held that the present cause of action—namely, the plaintiff's right as co-parcener to a moiety of the property and the invalidity of the instrument of sale to pass that right to the defendant—was not res judicata. CHINSIYA MUDALI v. VENKATACHELLA PILLAI . . . 3 Mad., 320

170. ———— Former suit on same cause of action—Suits stating different grounds for right to succeed to estate.—Plaintiff sued to recover a zamindari from his step-brother, alleging that the zamindari was hereditary property belonging to the family, the succession thereto being governed by the law of primogeniture; that his father died in 1859, leaving the plaintiff, defendant, and another, his sons, the former by the first wife, and the latter two by the second wife; and that the defendant (respondent) unlawfully enjoyed the estate, while plaintiff, as the eldest son, had a legal claim thereto. In defence it was pleaded that the claim was res judicata by the decree in a suit which was brought by plaintiff to obtain declaration of his status as the son of his father's pattaba stri, or royal wife, in which suit the plaintiff's father was first defendant, and defendant's mother was second defendant, and wherein they both denied that plaintiff was son of the pattaba stri and affirmed that second defendant was first defendant's first wife, and that her sons were preferential heirs to the zamindari. Among the points recorded was for "plaintiff to prove his status and right as alleged," and that issue was set down for defendants to rebut. The Judge disbelieved that plaintiff was the son of his father's first wife, and added, "Plaintiff further pleads that he is the eldest son, a position not denied, but one which cannot confer on him the status he now claims." The Judge decided that plaintiff had failed to prove that his mother was the pattaba stri, and that he was heir to the exclusion of second defendant's sons. On appeal to the Sudder Adawlat, the decree below was confirmed and the Court made the following observation: "It has been attempted at the hearing of the appeal to maintain the plaintiff's right to succeed as being the eldest son. This, however, was not the position taken in the Court below, where the succession was allowed to depend on another circumstance, —namely, the mother being the pattaba stri; and the Court therefore held the argument to be an inadmissible one." Held on appeal that the present suit was barred by res judicata, a different causa to the former not having been adduced. To the judgment in Chinnaya Mudali v. Venkata Pillai, 3 Mad., 326, after the words in page 334, "in favour of the defendant all the objective grounds of the decision which have led to the dismissal of the suit," the following ought to be added: "and without the establishment of which the suit could not have been logically or legally dismissed." MUTHUMADAVA NAIR v. 171. — Suit for enhancement of rent—Subsequent suit for admitted rent.—A suit for enhanced rent after notice having been dismissed on appeal, plaintiff sued to recover rent for the same year at the rate admitted by the defendant in the former suit. Held that the cause of action in the subsequent suit was not the same as in the former, and that the law of res judicata did not apply in bar. KHEDARONISSA BEEBEH v. BOODHEE BEEBEH [13 W. R., 317]

172. — Suit for rent against same tenant as in former suit—Decision in former suit.—A and B were co-sharers in a certain talukh to the extent of 7 annas and 4 annas, respectively. B died in 1868, and in 1872 A, who used to collect the rents on behalf of B, brought a suit against one of the raiyats for the rent of the 11 annas. An issue having been raised as to the extent of A's share omitting that of B, it was decided to be 7 annas only, and he got a decree accordingly. In a subsequent suit by A's widow against the same tenant for the rent due for the 11 annas share, Held that the decision in the former suit did not debar her from showing that she was entitled to the rent due on account of B's 4 annas share. SHAMADANISSA BEEBEH v. FERASUTOOLLAH SIDDAE . 2 C. L. R., 23

173. — Claim as heir to property as joint and undivided—Subsequent claim as reversioner on death of widow.—A, a brother's son, in 1847 claimed, on the ground that he had title as heir to the moiety of an estate, prior to the other brother's widow, on the plea that it was joint and undivided, and that suit was dismissed. In a subsequent suit accepting the decision of 1847, and regarding the widow's title to be prior to his, and as holding a life-interest in the whole estate before him, A claimed as heir next in reversion after the widow, regarding her property as separate, with a view to a declaration of his right as such heir to have a certain alienation by the widow (alleged by him to be illegal under Hindu law) set aside. Held that the two cases and causes of action were essentially different. SUNKUR DYAL SINGH v. PURMESSUR DYAL SINGH [6 W. R., 44]

174. — Dismissal of former suit to set aside assignments—Subsequent suit for possession by reversioner.—C, the reversioner expectant in the life-interest of a Hindu widow, instituted a suit in her lifetime to set aside sales of the estate. It had first been sold in execution of a decree against the widow and purchased by A, and then for arrears of revenue due by A and had been purchased by B; but this suit was dismissed under Act I of 1845, s. 24, on the ground that more than a year had elapsed since the sale for arrears of revenue. After the death of the widow, the reversioner sued B for recovery of possession of the lands. Held that the plaintiff was not barred by the dismissal of the suit instituted in the lifetime of the widow; the object of that suit being to set aside the assignments of the widow's interest, and not for the assertion of the plaintiff's right to the reversion. DOORGA CHURN v. KASST CHUNDER MOHTEEN [Marsh., 539: 2 Hay, 646]

175. — Suit to set aside alienation by widow—Subsequent suit to recover property as reversioner.—A widow (a life-tenant of an ancestral estate), having executed an ikrar transferring a share to N, her granddaughter, afterwards sued to set it aside on the ground that N had not conformed to its terms. While the suit was in the appeal stage, the widow died, and her reversioner applied to be made, and was admitted as, her kaem mukam, to carry on the appeal on her behalf. He afterwards sued to recover possession of the share as reversioner, alleging that the succession opened out to him on the death of the widow. Held that the causes of action in the two suits were different, and that it was not necessary for the reversioner, when he took up the widow's case in its appeal stage, to disclose his title and claim as reversioner, as he was not competent then to introduce any pleas arising out of a new state of facts not existing when the suit was instituted. DEORANIL KOOWAR v. INDURJEET KOOWAR . 12 W. R., 234

176. — Dismissal of suit to establish plaintiff's adoption—Civil Procedure Code, s. 13—Representation of estate by Hindu widow—Decree in favour of widow—Admission by widow subsequent to decree.—In 1877, S, claiming to be the adopted son of M, sued A, the widow of M, to recover his estate. A denied the adoption. S failing to adduce any evidence, the suit was dismissed under s. 158 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1877. In 1882, by an agreement made between A and S, A acknowledged the title of S as adopted son of M. A having died, a suit was brought against S by a reversioner of M to recover the estate of M. Held that S was estopped by the decree in the former suit from setting up his claim as adopted son against the plaintiff, and that the subsequent agreement between A and S did not affect plaintiff's right. ARUNACHALA v. 177. — Second suit for restitution of conjugal rights—Decree not executed—Subsequent voluntary cohabitation followed again by desertion—Satisfaction of decree—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 13—Husband and wife.—Plaintiff obtained a decree against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights in 1885, which was never executed. In 1887, however, she returned to his house, and stayed with him for two months. She afterwards deserted him again. Thereupon the plaintiff filed a second suit for restitution of conjugal rights. Held that the suit was not barred under s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). A second withdrawal from cohabitation constitutes a fresh cause of action. KESHAVALAL GIRDHARLAL v. BAL PARVATI . I. L. R., 18 Bom., 327 plaintiff had failed to prove the execution of the bond, defendant sued to recover the identical sum as a balance due on a khatta account. Held that the second suit was not brought on a cause of action previously tried and determined between the parties, and was cognizable by the Court of Small Causes. AUGHORE NATH GHOSAL v. ROOP CHAND MUNDUL [13 W. R., 97]

Deed inadmissible as being unregistered—Subsequent suit on registered bond.—I, to whom the obligee of a bond for the payment of money in which immoveable property was hypothecated had assigned by sale her right thereunder, sued in virtue of the deed of sale on such bond for the money due thereunder, claiming to recover by the sale of the hypothecated property. This suit was dismissed on the ground that the deed of sale, not being registered, could not be received in evidence, and consequently I's right to sue on such bond failed. I, having procured the execution of a fresh deed of sale and caused it to be registered, brought a second suit on such bond in virtue of such deed of sale, claiming as before. Held that the second suit was not barred by the provisions of s. 13 of Act X of 1877. ISHRI DAT v. HAR NARAIN LAL I. L. R., 3 All., 384

180. ——— Dismissal of suit for amount due on document—Subsequent suit for same amount.—The defendants and two others jointly executed a document (A), whereby they promised, on the 27th April 1874, to pay to the plaintiff Rs 25 at the end of April 1875, and also to give to the plaintiff, in April 1875, a certain quantity of grain by way of interest. Held on a suit on the document (KERNAN, J., dissenting) that the suit was not barred by the dismissal of a suit in 1877, in which the plaintiff sued the defendants for a proportionate amount due by them under the document (A), alleging a verbal promise by the defendants, in November 1876, to pay such proportionate amount. MUTTU CHETTI v. 181. ——— Suit for sum due on mortgage—Decisions in former suit for interest—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 13—Sale of mortgaged property in execution of decree.—Certain immoveable property was mortgaged to E and then sold to N. It was then brought to sale in execution of a decree against N and was purchased by H. The balance of the sale-proceeds after satisfaction of that decree was paid to N. Under the terms of the mortgage to E, interest on the principal amount was payable annually and its payment was charged on the property as well as the payment of the principal amount. The mortgagors having failed to pay the interest annually, E in 1875 sued them and N and H to recover the interest due. It was decided in that suit that N was primarily and personally liable for the interest then due on the mortgage, as he had received the sale-proceeds of the property, and that the property was only liable in case he failed to satisfy the claim. N subsequently paid into Court the sale-proceeds he had received, and E was paid the same. In 1878 E again sued the same persons for interest, and again N was declared primarily and personally liable, on the ground that he had not at once made over the sale-proceeds to E. In 1880 E sued the same persons to recover the principal amount and interest due on the mortgage, by the sale of the mortgaged property. Held that, whatever might have been the rights and relations of the parties as long as any portion of the sale-proceeds remained with N, their position towards him assumed an entirely different character when once he had discharged himself of those moneys, and with this change in the situation the ratio decidendi of the suits of 1875 and 1878 no longer existed, and therefore the decisions in those suits did not preclude E from bringing a suit to recover the principal and interest due on his mortgage from the mortgaged property. RATAN BAI v. HANUMAN DAS [I. L. R., 5 All., 118]

182. ——— Mortgage-deed passing possession of certain parcels of land and hypothecating others—Remedy of mortgagees—Precious decrees for rent obtained against mortgagors.—The obligee under an instrument, dated 1878, by which certain land was usufructually mortgaged and other land merely hypothecated to him, having obtained against the mortgagors decrees for rent due on part of the land under the terms of pattamchits executed by them on the date of the mortgage, now sued to recover the principal and interest due under that instrument. Held that he was not precluded from obtaining a decree by reason of his previous suits, and was entitled to a decree for the amount due, and in default of payment for the sale of the mortgaged premises. NANU v. RAMAN I. L. R., 16 Mad., 335

186. — Suit for redemption—Issue as to sale of equity of redemption—Subsequent suit under a different title for same object.—In 1870 the plaintiffs sued to redeem a mortgage of certain lands from the defendants' predecessors in title. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiffs' equity of redemption had been sold in execution of a decree to A B. The plaintiffs, having repurchased the equity of redemption from A B, brought a second suit to redeem the lands in the defendants' possession. Held that the question whether the equity of redemption of the lands in suit had been sold to A B was res judicata and could not be re-opened by the defendants on the ground that the plaintiffs were litigating under a different title in the former suit. *ALI MOHDIAN RAYOHAN v. 187. — Foreclosure in the Central Provinces.—By a bond, dated 10th February 1857, a certain village was mortgaged by one G to the appellants and their father as security for a loan; the bond providing that, "if I fail to pay the money as stipulated, I and my heirs shall, without objection, cause the settlement of the said village to be made with you." The interest of G in the village was described as that of a malguzar, and his proprietary right therein was declared by the revenue authorities shortly after the execution of the mortgage; but his payments of revenue being in arrear, the Board of Revenue granted a lease of the village for ten years to the appellants' father. The mortgagees in a suit on the bond obtained the following decree on 3rd November 1860: "As the defendant acknowledges the plaintiffs' claim, it is ordered that a decree be given to the plaintiffs for principal and interest and costs against the defendant and the mortgaged property." In proceedings in the Civil Court taken under this decree, the mortgagees asked for possession of the village, and obtained, on 17th July 1862, an order, in pursuance of which they were put in possession, an appeal by G being rejected. G took various steps to recover possession of the mortgaged property, or a declaration of his proprietary interest therein, but failed in his endeavours; an application for a grant of the proprietary right in the village, and an appeal from an order cancelling his pottah, being rejected by the revenue authorities on 8th December 1864 and 27th July 1865 respectively; and on 12th August 1867 G conveyed the village by deed of sale to the respondents. In a suit brought by them to redeem the mortgage and obtain possession of the property,—Held the suit was not barred by the order of the Civil Court of 17th July 1862, nor had the orders of the revenue officers of 8th December 1864 and 27th July 1865 effected such a transfer of any right which G might have had to the appellants as to render the sale to the respondents invalid. *GOKULDASS v. 189. — Decree for redemption—Second suit to redeem—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 18, 244.—A decree obtained by a mortgagor, which declared that the mortgagee should deliver up possession on payment of the sum found due to him, not having been executed for three years, a purchaser of the equity of redemption sued the mortgagee to redeem. Held that this suit was not barred by the former decree, and that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem. *Sami v. 190. — Conditional decree—Failure of mortgagor to pay in accordance with decree—Subsequent suit for redemption—Civil Procedure Code, s. 18—Foreclosure—Act IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property Act), s. 93.—In a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage, a decree for redemption was passed conditional upon the plaintiff paying the defendants, within a time specified, a sum which was found still due to the latter, and the decree provided that, if such sum were not paid within the time specified, the suit should stand dismissed. The plaintiff failed to pay, and the suit accordingly stood dismissed. Subsequently he again sued for redemption, alleging that the mortgage-debt had now been satisfied from the usufruct. Held, having regard to the distinction between simple and usufructuary mortgages, that the decree in the former suit only decided that, in order to redeem and get possession of the property, the mortgagor must pay the sum then found to be due by him to the mortgagee, and did not operate as res judicata so as to bar a second suit for redemption, when, after further enjoyment of the profits by the mortgagee, the mortgagor could say that the debt had now become satisfied from the usufruct. Having regard to s. 93 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), in a suit brought by a usufructuary mortgagor for possession on the ground that the mortgage-debt has been satisfied from the usufruct, and in which the plaintiff is ordered to pay something because the debt has not been satisfied as alleged, the decree passed against such a mortgagor for non-payment has not the effect of foreclosing him for all time from redeeming the property. On the death of the mortgagor, his son, claiming to have succeeded by the law of primogeniture to the zamindari as an impartible estate, sued to eject the mortgagee; and a decree was passed declaring what was the sum due on a date named and how far it was binding on the estate, and decreeing that, on payment of what might be due on taking an account, the mortgagee should give up possession. Many years later the zamindar applied to the Court to carry out this decree, and a like application was put in by the present plaintiff to whom seven-eighths of the equity of redemption had been assigned. the High Court as barred by limitation, and the applicants applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the order of the High Court. Meanwhile the plaintiff brought the present suit to redeem the mortgages of the late zamindar. Held (1) that the suit was not barred under Civil Procedure Code, s. 12, by reason of the pendency of the application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council; (2) that, as there was no decree for foreclosure passed in the previous suit which had been treated as a suit for redemption, the present suit was not precluded by the decree therein; (3) that the findings in the previous suit as to the amount of the debt and the extent to which it bound the estate were res judicata. NAINAPPA CHETTI v. At the date of that suit V was the manager of the family, consisting of himself and the plaintiff N who was then a minor. The decree did not provide for the foreclosure of the mortgage in the event of V failing to redeem. In 1878 N brought another suit to redeem the same property. decree did not direct foreclosure, the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee continued between the parties, and that the plaintiff's suit was not barred by the former decree. The defendant appealed. Held (PINHEY, J., dissentiente), reversing the decree of the lower Court, that the plaintiff's suit was barred. A decree for redemption, on the default of the decree-holder to pay the money declared to be due within the time fixed by the decree or if none be fixed, within the time allowed by the law for the execution of the decree, operates as a judgment of foreclosure, and debars the mortgagor from afterwards bringing a second suit to redeem the same property. GAN SAVANT BAL SAVANT v. 202. — Former suit in which right to enhance was declared.—The plaintiff sued to enhance the rent of the defendant's holding. In a former suit between the parties which the defendant had brought to determine the plaintiff's right to enhance, it was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to enhance. Held that the decision in the former case was rightly admitted as conclusive evidence in the present case as to the plaintiff's right to enhance. MANICK SINGH v. 203. — Declaration of right in suit for enhancement.—Where a Munsif, in a suit for enhancement of rent, found that the tenure was not protected from enhancement, but granted a decree for rent at the old rate, because the grounds on which enhancement was claimed had not been established,—Held that, as the Munsif was competent to make a declaration between the parties, his finding that the tenure was liable to enhancement, although not forming a portion of the first decree, was binding in a second suit for enhancement of rent. KNATTOOLLAH v. AMER BUKSH alias MOHROOLLAH . . . 25 W. R., 225

204. — Suit for khas possession.—The plaintiffs, as talukhdars, brought a suit against their tenant M for recovery of rent at enhanced rates of land held by him, as to two cottahs of which he denied that they were part of his holding, but alleged that they were part of the lakhiraj holding of one H, and H intervened in that suit and claimed the two cottahs as lakhiraj. The result of that suit was that the rent was assessed on the land admitted by M to be in his possession, excluding the two cottahs. The plaintiffs then brought a suit against H for a declaration that these two cottahs were their māl lands, and obtained a decree simply declaring their māl rights over the land in dispute. In a suit brought by the plaintiffs against H after serving him with notice to quit, for recovery of khas possession of the two cottahs with mesne profits, and praying that he might be ordered to remove a mud house erected by him on the land, the defence was that, as the plaintiffs had already claimed khas possession and obtained a decree simply declaring their right to receive rent, the suit was barred, and that, as H had been twenty years in possession and had erected a house without any opposition from the plaintiffs, they had no right now to sue for khas possession. Held that the suit was not barred by s. 2, Act VIII of 1859, and the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for khas possession. KASHAN CHUNDER GHOSH v. 205. ———— Suit for declaratory decree—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 13—Dismissal of suit for declaratory decree and to have deed set aside—Subsequent suit for possession with respect to same property and to set aside same deed.—In December 1878 H, a Hindu widow, in possession by way of maintenance of a certain estate, of which R owned one-third, and P, B, and S one-third jointly, made a gift thereof to N. H died in January 1879. In February 1879 R and P, B, and S joined in suing N for a declaration of their proprietary right to two-thirds of the estate and to have the deed of gift set aside. The Court trying this suit treated it as one for a mere declaration of right and dismissed it with reference to the provisions of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, on the ground that the plaintiffs had omitted to sue for possession, although they were not in possession and were able to sue for it. In November 1879 R and P, B, and S again joined in suing N. In this suit they claimed possession of two-thirds of the estate and to have the deed of gift set aside. Held by the Full Bench (reversing the judgment of PEARSON, J., and affirming that of OLDFIELD, J.) that the decision in the former suit was no bar to the determination in the second suit of the question as to the validity of the deed of gift. *RAM SEWAK SINGH v. 206. ———— Suit for declaration of title—Subsequent suit to recover arrears—Deshpande vatan—Suit by one sharer against other.—Where a person having previously obtained a decree declaratory of his title sues his co-sharer in a deshpande vatan, who is bound by the decree to recover arrears, the previous decree operates as res judicata as regards the plaintiff's title, except so far as circumstances subsequent to decree may affect it. *DULABH VAHUNJI v. 207. ———— Suit for moveables after former suit declaring right to them.—Where a suit for a share of ancestral property was decreed, but the decree was modified on appeal as regards certain immovables so far as to be made declaratory of plaintiff's right to a specified share without any specific declaration of value, and plaintiff subsequently brought a second suit for the value of the moveables, Held that the second suit was not barred by Act VIII of 1859, s. 2. SHROJ NUNDUN SINGH v. RAJCOOMAR BABOO DEO NUNDUN SINGH [24 W. R., 23]

208. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 18—Instalment-bond—Hypothecation—Declaratory decree. In 1864 the obligee of an instalment bond, in which certain immoveable property was hypothecated as collateral security for the payment of the instalments, brought a suit upon such bond "against Z and A (the obligors) and the property hypothecated in the bond, defendants," claiming to recover instalments which were due and unpaid, and a declaration of his right to recover instalments which were not due, as they fell due. He obtained a decree in such suit for "the amount claimed" against the "two defendants." It was also provided in such decree that, "until the satisfaction of the entire amount of the bond, the plaintiff can realize the amount of each instalment by executing this decree." The obligee applied in execution of such decree to recover, by the sale of such property, which had passed into the hands of third parties after the passing of such decree, instalments which had become due after the passing of such decree, and had not been paid. Such execution having been refused on the ground that such decree was a money-decree, the obligee brought a second suit upon such bond to recover such instalments by the enforcement of the lien therein created on such property. Held that, although the enforcement of such lien was claimed in the former suit, yet, inasmuch as it was very questionable whether the Court was competent to grant the second relief claimed in that suit, viz., a declaration of right to recover instalments which were not due in execution of a decree for instalments which were due, and the claim in the second suit was not the same as that in the former suit, the plaintiff asking for instalments said to be actually due, and not for a declaratory decree for instalments not due, the second suit was not barred by s. 13 of Act X of 1877. UMRAO LAL v. MEHARI SINGH [I. L. R., 3 All., 297]

209. ———— Suit for partition—Right of widow—Subsequent suit to get rid of partition.—Where a widow was treated as an equal sharer in her husband's estate with her sons, and in conjunction with one son applied for partition as a sharer, and objections taken to the partition were overruled, and no appeal made to the Civil Court, Held that a suit to declare the widow only entitled to maintenance was not maintainable. OODIA v. BHOPAL [3 Agra, 137]

210. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 2 and 3—Admission—Revision of judgment.—Plaintiffs, having purchased the rights of a widow in certain properties, sued the defendants for partition of the share purchased; defendants admitted the widow's right to a certain extent, but the suit was dismissed on the ground that plaintiffs, before they could obtain partition, must establish the extent of their right and the validity of the purchase. Held, on plaintiffs' second suit, that it being between the same parties, and for the same property on the same cause of action, was barred by s. 2, Act VIII of 1859; that defendants' admission, which was merely an admission in plaintiffs' favour, gave no new cause of action; and that, if the Courts failed to decide all the matters in dispute which they had before them in the former suit, their judgment could not be revised in a new suit; such revision being contrary to the provisions of s. 2, Act VIII of 1859. GHASSEE KHAN v. KULLOO [1 Agra, 152]

211. ———— Bom. Act V of 1864.—In 1871 the plaintiff sued to establish his sole right to a portion of a field on the ground that it had been allotted to him by partition. The defendant also claimed it as his share obtained by partition.

The Court rejected the plaintiff's claim, holding that no partition had taken place, and that the field was the joint property of five co-parceners, including the plaintiff and defendant. In 1878 the plaintiff brought a second suit for a partition of the field, including the portion for which his former suit had been instituted. Held that the present suit for partition was not barred by the previous suit which was brought to establish the plaintiff's sole right to the lands in question. SHIBRAM v. 212. — Former suit for declaration of right to partition, Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 2.—A Hindu of the Southern Maratha Country having two sons undivided from him died in 1871, leaving a will disposing of ancestral estate substantially in favour of his second son, excluding the elder who claimed his share in this suit. In 1861 a suit brought by this elder son against his father and brother to obtain a declaration of his right to a partition of the ancestral estate was dismissed, on the ground that he had no right in his father's lifetime to compel a partition of moveables; and that, as to the immovables, the claim failed, because they were situate beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. In a suit by the elder son against his brother after the father's death for a share of the property on the ground that it was ancestral estate, Held that this suit was not barred under Act VIII of 1859, s. 2; the proceedings of 1861 not having amounted to an adjudication between the brothers as to their rights in the estate arising on their father's death. LAKSHMAN DADA NAIK v. 213. — Effect of unexecuted decree for partition in subsequent suit for partition of same property—Mortgage of share—Purchase by a stranger of portion of the lands included in the decree—Suit by him for partition.—A and B were the joint owners in equal shares of certain property. In 1869 B mortgaged his share to A under a mortgage-deed drawn up in the English form. Later on, in 1869, A brought a suit against B for partition, and in 1870 obtained a decree appointing a commissioner of partition and directing the partition. No return was made to this commission, and no actual partition was come to. In 1873 A obtained a decree for an account, and for payment, or in default, for sale of the property. In 1878 B's share was put up for sale, and purchased by C, and C was put into possession. In 1881 C brought a suit against A for partition. Held that the decree obtained by A in 1873 put an end to B's right to redeem, unless he paid the amount found due against him, and therefore at the time of the sale to C, B's right to redeem had ceased to exist, and the property was no longer subject to partition under the decree of 1870, and therefore the partition asked for under the suit of 1881 could be granted. KIRTY CHUNDER MITTER v. 214. — Suit for declaration of right to partition—Decree not executed—Subsequent suit for same purpose.—Where a decree declaring a right to partition has not been given effect to by the parties proceeding to partition in accordance with it, and the decree has become, by lapse of time or otherwise, unenforceable, it is competent to the parties, or any of them, if they still continue to be interested in the joint property, to bring a fresh suit for a declaration of their right for partition. Such a suit will not be barred by reason of the former decree for partition, though that decree may operate as res judicata in respect of any claim or defence which was or might have been raised in the suit in which it was passed. NAZRAT-ULLAH v. MUJIB-ULLAH. I. L. R., 13 All., 309

215. — Decree in former suit for partition—Partial and general partition—Account.—In a previous suit between the plaintiff and the defendant, the plaintiff alleged that there had been a partition of the family property into two parcels, and under a deed of partition drawn up at the time claimed one of these parcels. The deed being held invalid, the suit was rejected, with liberty to the plaintiff to sue for a general partition. In the second suit the plaintiff prayed for a general partition as a member of an undivided Hindu family. Held that the second suit was not res judicata; for, although the plaintiff might in the first suit have made an alternative case and prayed for a general partition in case he failed to establish the previous partition which he alleged, yet it could not be said that he ought to have done so. Held also that in the case of joint enjoyment by the members of the whole family, or enjoyment by different members of different portions of the family property, the Court will not, except under special circumstances, order an account to be taken of past transactions, but will make division of the property actually existing at the date of partition. Lakshman Dada Naik v. 216. — First suit based on the general right of a co-parcener to claim partition of the joint estate—Refusal of Judge in first suit to allow plaint to be amended so as to include claim to partition based on an award—Second suit based on an award—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13, expts. I, II.—In 1874 the plaintiffs' father filed a suit against the defendants for partition of joint family property. The subject-matter of the suit was referred to arbitration out of Court. The arbitrators made an award to the effect that partition should be postponed till the family debts were paid off. The award was accepted by all the sharers, and so the plaintiffs' father withdrew his suit. In 1880 the debts were paid off. Thereupon the plaintiffs' father demanded partition, but was refused. He therefore filed a partition suit in 1883 against the defendants. In his plaint he made no mention of the award of 1874, but relied on his right as a co-parcener to enforce partition. After the settlement of issues, he applied for amendment of the plaint, so as to include his claim on the award. The Court refused the amendment, on the ground that it would materially alter the character of the suit, and dismissed the suit, as barred under s. 373 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1832). Against this decision plaintiffs' father did not appeal. In 1884 the plaintiffs filed the present suit for partition, relying expressly on their title under the award of 1874. Held that the suit was not barred by the plea of res judicata. THAKORE BHOBARJI BANAJI v. 217. — Suit for mesne profits—Former suit for possession.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of land and for wasilat from the period at which he alleged he was dispossessed; and he obtained a decree for possession of the lands and for wasilat from the date of the plaint. He afterwards sued the defendant for wasilat from the date of the alleged dispossession to the date of the plaint. Held that wasilat having been claimed in the previous plaint for that period, and there having been an adjudication upon his claim for wasilat and no evidence that wasilat was withheld for the period for which it was now claimed, through inadvertence or by mistake, the case was within Act VIII of 1859, s. 2, excluding from the jurisdiction of the Court causes of action "which shall have been heard and determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction to a former suit between the same parties." LUTENFOONISSA BIRN v. 218. — Where a plaint prayed for possession and wasilat, and a decree was given for possession without mention of the wasilat, and on application for review it was urged, though not in the written grounds of application, that the question of wasilat ought to have been disposed of, but no decision was given as to it either by the High Court or by the Court of first instance, to which application was afterwards made, — Held that the fact that a prayer for wasilat was contained in the plaint in the suit in which only a decree for a possession was given was not a bar to a subsequent suit for mesne profits within s. 2, Act VIII of 1859. GAURI BAIJNATHPRASAD v. D then sued in the Civil Court to recover possession with wasilat, which he estimated at the rate of the rent previously claimed, and obtained a decree for possession without wasilat. Held that the second suit was not for the same thing as the first under a different name, and that plaintiff was entitled to wasilat as well as possession. DATARAM v. 220. — Suit for ejectment—Former suit deciding as to relinquishment of the land.—Held that a former suit which decided the question of relinquishment of the land by defendant, a raiyat, did not bar a subsequent suit which was brought on the allegation that, the land being sir land, the defendant, the occupant, had no right of occupancy, and should consequently be ejected. NAIPAL SINGH v. 221. — Suit to recover possession, Dismissal of—Subsequent suit to enhance rent.—In a suit to recover khas possession of land, of which the plaintiff alleged he had been fraudulently dispossessed by the defendant, the defendant claimed to be entitled to the possession of the land under a deed of gift at a fixed rent. The Judge found upon the facts that the deed of gift was invalid; that the land was mâl; and that the defendant was entitled to retain the possession, and thereupon dismissed the suit. Held that the plaintiff was not precluded by the decision in that suit from afterwards maintaining a suit against the defendant to enhance the rent. NIRMALMOH SINGH DEO v. 222. — Suit for same land on different title—Failure in former suit.—Plaintiff, after failing in a former suit to establish her right to certain land as belonging to her palmi talukh, was not allowed to fall back on a different title and bring a separate suit claiming the same land as belonging to her mirasi, the cause of action in both cases being really the same. AMRUSOO MOHUN DEB v. 223. — Suit for possession—Dismissal of former suit for possession as heir.—A suit for possession as the heir of S is not barred by s. 2, Act VIII of 1859, because plaintiff's former claim to the same property as the heir of S's father was dismissed. GOOROO DUTT v. SOOROO

[16 W. R., 264]

224. — Suit on title derived by gift—Subsequent suit as heir.—Held (MITTHER, J., dubitante) that a suit claiming property on a title by inheritance was barred by ss. 2 and 7, Code of Civil Procedure, 1859, where plaintiff's claim on a title derived by gift had already been adjudicated upon. DUDDSAR BIRN v. 225. — Suit for ejectment based on alleged lease—Subsequent suit to eject tenant as trespasser founded on ownership.—The present plaintiffs in 1869 sued the present defendants to eject the latter from a certain piece of land, alleging that the defendants held it under certain leases dated July 1864. The genuineness of the alleged leases was put in issue in that suit, and was decided by the Subordinate Judge in favour of the plaintiffs, who accordingly obtained a decree. On appeal the District Judge reversed that decree, being of opinion that the alleged leases were not proved. In 1874 the plaintiffs brought the present suit to eject the defendants. In this suit the plaintiffs sued simply as owners, and alleged that the defendants were in occupation as tenants paying rent to the plaintiffs, and that they (the defendants) had refused to give up possession. Held (MELVILL, J., dissentiente) that the plaintiffs were not barred by the judgment in the former suit. The fact of both the suits being against the defendants as tenants of the plaintiffs did not imply that the suits were on the same cause of action. The term "tenancy" may be applied to a great many different relations between the occupier and the owner of property, agreeing perhaps only in the single circumstance of a holding by the one of the property of the other. The test in each case is not whether a tenancy has in both suits been sued on, but whether the particular contract or relation put forward in the first case was the same specific contract sued on in the second. A cause of action reduced to the concrete form in a contest between individuals implied a specific right and a specific infringement of the right; and a judgment that one such specific right had not been made out was not a trial and determination of a cause of action resting on another specific right. The specific rights on which the plaintiffs relied in the two suits were different, and would have to be proved by different evidence. GIRDHAR MANORDAS v. DAYASHAI KALASHAI I L. R., 8 Bom., 174

226. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 2—Suit for accretion—Different cause of action.—A suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to a chur, which they claimed as an accretion to mouzah L, was held to be barred under Act VIII of 1859, s. 2, by a judgment in a former suit, in which they had claimed the same land as an accretion to mouzah B, because, whether by accretion to the one estate or to the other, the question in both suits was that of title by accretion. A complainant is bound to bring forward in this suit all the grounds of origin of his right. A difference in the origin of the right is not a matter which makes a different cause of action. KASHER KISHORE ROY CHOWDHRY v. KRISTO CHUNDER SANDYAL CHOWDHRY 22 W. R., 464

227. ——— Former suit for kabuliati—Decision as to quantity of land held.—In a previous suit the plaintiff sought to obtain a kabuliati from the defendant in respect of land held by him alleging the quantity to be 8 bighas and 17 cottahs. It was therein determined that the defendant held only 7 bighas and no more. In the present suit brought to eject the defendant from 1 bigha 17 cottahs of land, Held that it was not maintainable, as it was for the determination of a question decided in the former suit. GOPAL CHANDRA ROY v. in a previous suit for rent by the zamindar against the raiyats, the raiyats had alleged that the amount of rent and the extent of land had been overstated by the zamindar, but the Court decided that the raiyats were bound by a jumma bundi signed by them, and refused to try whether the extent had been overstated. Held that the present suit was not barred as res judicata. ROGHONATH MUNDUL v. The suit was dismissed, on the ground that, though A was known as a part of the plaintiff's mouzah, yet it had been included in a patni lease of an adjoining mouzah, which the zamindars had granted to the defendants previously to the date of the plaintiff's lease. The plaintiff brought a second suit claiming another portion of A on the same title. Held that the claim was barred as res judicata. Mohidin v.
